paid R500 as earnest-money at the date of the contract, and the remainder of the purchase-money was to be paid on the execution of the conveyance. In October, November, and December, the plaintiff's solicitors applied to the defendant for the title-deeds, in order that the conveyance might be prepared; and on the 6th December, the defendant through her solicitors replied that she was ready and willing to execute the conveyance, but could not find the title-deeds. The plaintiff's solicitors then requested to be furnished with an abstract of title, or a statement of the defendant's title to the house, and then they would consider what could be done. No reply to this letter being received, they wrote again on the 10th December 1884, stating that the time for completing the contract had expired; and giving formal notice that, if the defendant did not send the abstract or statement of title within two days, proceedings would be taken to compel specific performance and to recover damages. In reply to this letter, the defendant's solicitors wrote on the 11th December 1884, stating that the defendant had searched for the title-deeds, but had been unable to find them, but that, as soon as they were found, they would be handed over. In the meantime, they were instructed to state that the property was mortgaged to M (of whose will the defendant was executrix) and one K; that K had agreed to convey the property in question to the defendant; and that the deed of conveyance was being prepared. They further stated that, if the plaintiff wished to accept a conveyance without the old title-deeds, the defendant was willing to indemnify him against all claims to the property; but if he was not prepared to do so, the defendant was willing to pay back the earnest-money to him and to rescind the contract. On the 13th December 1884, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote that they could not advise the plaintiff to take the mere conveyance offered, but if the defendant would deposit the purchase-money in a bank in the joint names of the plaintiff and defendant until the title-deeds were found, the plaintiff would complete the purchase at once. They further stated that the plaintiff declined to rescind the contract, and would hold the defendant responsible for loss and costs incurred by the delay. Further correspondence ensued, and a suit was filed on the 20th February 1885, praying for specific performance and R500 damages, or that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of R2,500 damages, and refund the R500 earnest-money. It subsequently transpired that the title-deeds were with K, the co-mortgagee, and they were set forth in the defendant's affidavit of documents filed in July 1885. The defendant, after the suit was filed, sold the property to one J, and K, the co-mortgagee, joined in the conveyance to him. Held that the case was governed by Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bl., 1070, and Bain v. Fothergill, 7 Eng. & Ir., Ap., 268, and that the plaintiff could not recover damages for the loss of his bargain. The defendant had offered to do all that lay in her power to carry out her contract, and the case of Engell v. Fitch, L. R., 4 Q. B., 659, did not apply. PITAMBER SUNDARJI v. CASSIBAI

8. ——— Rights of renter of abkari farm—Madras Abkari Act (Madras Act III of 1864), s. 6—Right of Collector to close shops included in the renter's contract—Collector's orders modified by Board of Revenue.—The plaintiff rented from Government an abkari farm, on terms which reserved certain powers of control to the Collector, and obtained a license under the Abkari Act. He did not manage the shops in the contract area himself, nor obtain separate licenses for their management by others. The Collector made orders which were subsequently modified by the Board of Revenue, directing the closing of certain shops which the plaintiff had sublet and directing that others should not be opened. It was found that the Collector's orders were not in excess of the powers reserved to him under the contract, and that they had not been issued arbitrarily or otherwise than in good faith. In a suit for breach of contract and for damages occasioned to the plaintiff by these orders,—Held the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. CHOYI

9. ——— Breach of covenants for title—Voluntary settlement—Consideration.—Though, under the English law, damages may be recovered for breach of covenants for title contained in a voluntary settlement of such a character as to be ineffectual without the assistance of a Court of equity, and which assistance a Court of equity would refuse to a volunteer, yet this depending on the principle of English law, that a document sealed and delivered imports consideration, which principle does not hold as between Hindus, it is open to a defendant to show that the plaintiff is suing on a contract for which there was no consideration other than natural love and affection, which cannot be made the ground of a suit for damages. KALU BIN VISAJI v. DAMODHAR GOVIND [9 Bom., 92

73. ——— Attachment of property of third person—Liability of execution-creditor for wrongful seizure in execution of decree.—There is not any universal rule that a judgment-creditor is, or that he is not, liable in suit for a wrongful seizure, or for injury to the goods while under seizure. His liability must depend upon the circumstances of the case, i.e., upon the fact whether the wrongful seizure or the injury is the result of his own conduct; for instance, if the judgment-creditor personally, or his authorized agent (ex. gr., his pleader), apply, under s. 214 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the attachment of property which is specially designated in that application, and if the Court grant its warrant for the seizure of that particular property, and the officer of the Court execute the warrant, and the property be not that of the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would certainly be liable for that wrongful seizure, and the officer of the Court could justify under the warrant, and would not be liable so long as he kept within the duty expressly prescribed for him by it. But if the application of the judgment-creditor were for a general attachment under s. 218 of the Code, and the Court took no such security from him as it might take under that section, and if the Court granted a general warrant for the attachment of the moveable property of the judgment-debtor, and the officer of the Court, without any suggestion to that effect from the judgment-creditor or his agent, beyond a general direction to execute the warrant, were to seize property not belonging to the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would not be responsible. Quære—Whether, under such circumstances as those last mentioned, the officer of the Court would be responsible. An attachment having been ordered, M and J objected by petition that the property belonged to them, and not to P, upon which V A & Co. applied to have them made co-defendants in the regular suit which had been brought against P, on the ground that they (M and J) and P were partners in trade. The decision in the suit released the property on the ground that there was no such partnership, and that the property belonged exclusively to M and J. M and J then sued V A & Co. to recover damages sustained by their goods under the above attachment and profits foregone during the stoppage of their trade by the tortious acts of the defendants. Held that, as V A & Co. had made the attachment most carelessly and recklessly, and without sufficient or reasonable ground for assuming M and J to be partners of P, they were rightly amerced in damages. Held also that their act, having been one done without a probable cause, was such as to evince a malicious motive on their part, and that damages in such a case should be in the nature of a penalty as well as of a compensation. Held further that plaintiffs were not bound to release their property, and it was no defence to their claim for damages to say that they might have done so by giving security, nor could their declining to do so shift the responsibility of the illegal acts of the defendants. In a suit for a refund of the deposit money and for damages,—Held that, the suit was brought, not on the pottah and kabuliat, but on an implied contract by the defendant to do that which was necessary to give effect to his own pottah, viz., to allow it to be registered, and that the real question was whether the plaintiffs had done all that they were required to do to entitle them to the assent of the defendant to registration. As the pottah had been executed and handed over, if it specified no pre-requisite conditions, the natural presumption was that no such conditions existed, although that presumption might be rebutted by sufficient evidence. Damages for a breach of a contract of this kind, though not necessarily the same as for keeping a person out of possession, would yet be the loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the contract not having been performed. Held further that, although the amount the refund of which was sued for was in fact in deposit for the rents of the old lease which had not yet expired, yet, as the defendant had abandoned that lease and entered into a new arrangement as regarded the deposit, he could not now fall back on the old contract once abandoned, nor could he retain the money under the new contract which he had wrongfully refused to carry out. As a general principle, compensation must be commensurate with the injury sustained. Defendants unroofed their house, raised the wall, and placed beams on it to rebuild their house. The lower Appellate Court found that, in consequence of this alteration, the rain from defendants' house descended upon plaintiff's verandah and caused damage to plaintiff, and decreed that defendants should restore the wall to its former height, and remove the beams placed on it. Held, on special appeal, that taking the finding to be that the alteration created "stillicidium," where it did not exist before, or that it rendered more burdensome an existent "servitus stillicidii," it would be very dangerous to hold that every trifling excess in the exercise of a servitude should justify the pulling down of the building creating the excess; that in the present case the damages should be assessed and awarded, and the injunction to remove the roof of the house and reduce the wall be made conditional upon the defendants not removing the cause of the nuisance. 165. ———— Infringement of trade mark—Damage caused to plaintiffs by way of enhancement of loss, and not by loss of profit.—Where the infringement of the plaintiffs' trade mark by the defendants caused a loss of profit to the plaintiffs, not by diminishing the amount of goods sold by the plaintiffs, by taking away their customers or ousting them from their usual market, but by causing the goods actually sold by the plaintiffs to be sold at a diminished price,—Held that the defendants were liable for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs; and that the amount of the reduction in the price of the goods sold was the measure of damages. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for the infringement of a trade mark used by the plaintiffs upon bundles of yarn sold by them, and known as "No. 20 red tie" yarn. They alleged that the defendants introduced into the Madras market a quantity of yarn bearing similar marks to those upon the plaintiffs' yarn, but of very inferior quality; and that, in consequence of this action of the defendants, the selling price of the plaintiff's yarn was, during the months of April and May 1885, depreciated beyond the amount of depreciation attributable to the natural fall of market prices in those months; and they contended that such depreciation was the natural and reasonable result of the defendants' wrongful act. The plaintiffs calculated the damages sustained by them at R6,000. It appeared that during the months in question the plaintiffs' mill was not working at a profit, and would have made no profits even if the plaintiffs had obtained for their yarn the ruling market price. The damage, therefore (if any), caused to the plaintiffs by the action of the defendants was not in form of profits, but in the form of enhancement of loss. Held, upon the evidence, that the extra fall in the price of the plaintiffs' yarn beyond the general market depression was due, not simply to the introduction of the defendants' yarn into the Madras market, but to its introduction with the trade mark similar to that of the plaintiffs. The Court found that the said wrongful act of the defendants prejudicially affected the sale of the plaintiffs' yarn to the extent of about two annas per bundle; that the damage thus sustained by the plaintiffs was the reasonable and probable result of the defendants' action; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover such damage from the defendants. The plaint stated that the defendants were punished criminally for the trespass by the Magistrate, who, after enquiry under ss. 318 and 319 of the Criminal Procedure Code, restored the possession of the pagoda to the plaintiffs. The damages claimed were the value of jewels, cash, records, and accounts not restored; the expense incurred by the durmakurtah in the purification of the pagoda; the amount of counsel's and vakil's fees in the criminal proceedings; and the amount of income received by the defendants during their possession during a festival held at the pagoda. Held that the plaint was brought by the plaintiff personally, and not on behalf of the plaintiffs by the durmakurtah through his recognized agents; that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a moderate amount of damages for the wrong done to them in ejecting them from the pagoda; that the expenses incurred in the criminal proceedings instituted by the plaintiffs were not recoverable as damages, such damages not being directly traceable to the wrong and its natural and necessary consequences; that the amount of income received by the defendants during the festival was a loss sustained by the durmakurtah and not by the plaintiff personally; and that the plaintiff had failed to make out the loss of property alleged. The penalty for non-performance of the charter-party was to be the estimated amount of freight. The plaintiffs began to load on May 3rd, and continued doing so until June 10th, having then shipped very nearly the full cargo; they then stopped loading in consequence of a notice from the defendant that the ship was leaking. In consequence of the leakage, the cargo had to be shifted, and a portion of it found to be damaged had to be replaced after the leak was stopped. The charges of shifting the cargo and the cost of the cargo substituted were paid by the defendant. Considerable delay occurred in consequence of the leak, and the loading was not completed until the end of July. On May 28th, when the plaintiffs had loaded a portion of the cargo and had obtained bills of lading, they drew a bill of exchange at sixty days for the value of the cargo covered by the bills of lading on their agent at St. Denis, which they sold to the Comptoir d' Escompte de Paris, hypothecating the cargo for the amount of their draft. property by a person in insolvent circumstances and known to be so by the disponee will be set aside if impeached by creditors except where the transferee has simply pressed a valid claim or made a purchase in good faith The plaintiff G obtained a decree against M on the 30th September 1878 M died in April 1879 leaving A a childless widow, him surviving At his death M was in insolvent circumstances On the 7th June 1879, A conveyed by a deed of sale (exhibit 98) the whole of his property consisting of a house and a garden to the defendants who were his separated brothers in consideration of two time-barred debts due to them by her deceased husband At the same time she executed in their favour a rent note (exhibit 99) by which she agreed to pay them a nominal rent for her occupation of the house but no rent was ever claimed or paid On the same day the defendants passed an agreement in writing (exhibit No 114) to the widow by which they undertook to settle the claims evidence that it did not form any part of the consideration for the sale deed (exhibit 98) In 1881 the plaintiff G, in execution of his decree against M, attached the house conveyed by the sale deed. The attachment was raised at the instance of the defendants who claimed the house under the sale-deed (exhibit 98) Thereupon the plaintiff G brought the present suit to establish his right to attach and sell the house as the property of his judgment debtor M, in execution of his decree The defendants relied upon the deed of sale executed by the widow (exhibit 98) Held that the alleged sale to the defendants (exhibit 98) was not a real transaction supported by good consideration and must be set aside in so far as it interfered with the execution of the plaintiff's decree The transferees were not purchasers for money, or even creditors diligent in pressing an enforceable right They were members of the vendor's family and the consideration they gave consisted of old and barred claims that could not be enforced Payment of such debts by a transfer of the insolvent's whole estate, to the disappointment of creditors whose claims were not barred was in itself a fraud Being made to near relatives acquainted with the facts, it would not be regarded as a real and practical transaction. Held also that the character of the transaction was not altered by the agreement (exhibit 114) of the defendants to settle the claims of M's creditors. That agreement was not communicated to the creditors, and it could be suppressed at any moment by the concurrence of the parties to it. If that agreement was independent of the conveyance (exhibit 98) of the property to the defendants, the latter had no consideration to support it, except, merely the moral consideration to pay a barred debt, which could not prevail against the obligation to satisfy a decree about to be executed. If, on the other hand, the agreement (exhibit 114) was connected with the conveyance (exhibit 98), the exclusion of its terms from that document and the secrecy observed about it stamped the transaction with fraud, whether the transfer was real or only fraudulent. There was no honest trust for distribution which could defeat the plaintiff's execution. M might have preferred one creditor to another having an equal right, and the fact that the creditor was his brother did not make such a preference improper. But although M might have preferred one creditor to another, his widow could not do so. She took her husband's estate as an aggregate, assets and debts together. She was in some degree a trustee and at any rate under a legal obligation to pay her deceased husband's debts, and to pay them as far as she could equally. She was not at liberty to deal capriciously with the estate, which she could alienate at all only for special purposes indicated by the law. She ought not, in performing the duty cast upon her, to prefer one valid claim to another, as her husband might have done. This advantage a creditor might have obtained from her husband by his diligence, but on her no pressure could be exercised except through the estate which she was bound, pressure or no pressure, to distribute among the creditors. A purchaser from a Hindu widow must see that she exercised her power of sale strictly, or at least satisfy himself that a sufficient cause for alienation exists. If the defendants told the widow that the claims, in consideration of which she made the conveyance to them, were barred by limitation, then clearly she had joined with them in a scheme for depriving the judgment-creditors of their due. If they did not tell her, they deceived her by their silence when, as near relatives getting an advantage, they were bound, in dealing with an ignorant woman, to put her in possession of all the material facts. 17. ——————— Fraudulent conveyance—Gift in fraud of creditors—Subsequent sale by creditors in execution of subject-matter of gift—Purchase at execution-sale for inadequate price by means of fraud.—In June 1875, A, being in pecuniary difficulties, executed a deed of gift of all his property in favour of his wife and minor sons, the plaintiffs. B, one of his then existing creditors, subsequently obtained a decree against him, and in execution sold part of the said property. At the sale, the first defendant, by means of false representation, became the purchaser at an inadequate price. In July 1879, A applied to have the sale set aside, on the ground of the fraud of the first defendant, but his application was rejected. In 1884 the plaintiffs by their next friend sued to set aside the sale, contending that at the date of B's decree the property was theirs by virtue of the deed of gift of June 1875, and further that the sale was void by reason of the defendant's fraud. Held, rejecting the plaintiffs' claim, that the plaintiffs could not be allowed to set up their deed of gift as against the proceedings in execution under which the defendant acquired his title as purchaser. That gift was made to them by A when he was in pecuniary difficulties, and included all A's property. It was, therefore, void as against his then existing creditors, of whom B was one. B was, therefore, entitled to sell the property in execution of his decree. HORMUSJI v. COWASJI

18. ——————— Sale to creditor for old debt and new advance on debtor's bankruptcy—Intent to delay and defeat creditors—Bonâ fides of purchaser—Fraudulent preference—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5.—On the 27th February 1886, the firm of Ranchhod Jamna, a family firm, was on the point of failing, being heavily indebted. On that day, the managing member of the firm executed four sale-deeds, comprising all the property of the firm, in favour of four different creditors of the firm, of whom the plaintiff was one. The deed executed in favour of the plaintiff was in consideration of a then existing long-standing debt and a fresh advance of R3,400 made by him to the firm. The next day the firm stopped payment. The defendant was one of the creditors of the firm, and sought to attach and sell the property conveyed to the plaintiff in execution of a decree which the defendant had obtained against the firm. The plaintiff's objection to the attachment by the defendant having been disallowed, he brought the present suit against the defendant, to establish his right to the property attached under his sale-deed. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the sale to the plaintiff, having been effected in order to delay and defeat the creditors and to give undue preference to the plaintiff, was void. Held on the evidence that the sale to the plaintiff was, on the part of the plaintiff at least, a bonâ fide sale in consideration of a debt still due, and for payment of which the plaintiff had been pressing, and R3,400 in cash; and that there were no circumstances in the case which showed that the plaintiff in entering into it was a party to any scheme to delay the general body of the creditors. That being the case, the sale was not impeachable at the instance of the defendant; although, having regard to the fact of its having been negotiated on the eve of the failure of the firm, it might possibly be regarded as a sale by which the plaintiff obtained an unfair preference, and as such perhaps be impeachable at the suit of the whole body of creditors. In re Johnson: Golden v. *Gillam, L. acquainted with the facts, it would not be regarded as a real and practical transaction. Held also that the character of the transaction was not altered by the agreement (exhibit 114) of the defendants to settle the claims of M's creditors. That agreement was not communicated to the creditors, and it could be suppressed at any moment by the concurrence of the parties to it. If that agreement was independent of the conveyance (exhibit 98) of the property to the defendants, the latter had no consideration to support it, except merely the moral consideration to pay a barred debt, which could not prevail against the obligation to satisfy a decree about to be executed. If, on the other hand, the agreement (exhibit 114) was connected with the conveyance (exhibit 98), the exclusion of its terms from that document and the secrecy observed about it stamped the transaction with fraud, whether the transfer was real or only fraudulent. There was no honest trust for distribution which could defeat the plaintiff's execution. M might have preferred one creditor to another having an equal right, and the fact that the creditor was his brother did not make such a preference improper. But although M might have preferred one creditor to another, his widow could not do so. She took her husband's estate as an aggregate, assets and debts together. She was in some degree a trustee and at any rate under a legal obligation to pay her deceased husband's debts, and to pay them as far as she could equally. She was not at liberty to deal capriciously with the estate, which she could alienate at all only for special purposes indicated by the law. She ought not, in performing the duty cast upon her, to prefer one valid claim to another, as her husband might have done. This advantage a creditor might have obtained from her husband by his diligence, but on her no pressure could be exercised except through the estate which she was bound, pressure or no pressure, to distribute among the creditors. A purchaser from a Hindu widow must see that she exercised her power of sale strictly, or at least satisfy himself that a sufficient cause for alienation exists. If the defendants told the widow that the claims, in consideration of which she made the conveyance to them, were barred by limitation, then clearly she had joined with them in a scheme for depriving the judgment-creditors of their due. If they did not tell her, they deceived her by their silence when, as near relatives getting an advantage, they were bound, in dealing with an ignorant woman, to put her in possession of all the material facts. 17. ——————— Fraudulent conveyance—Gift in fraud of creditors—Subsequent sale by creditors in execution of subject-matter of gift—Purchase at execution-sale for inadequate price by means of fraud.—In June 1875, A, being in pecuniary difficulties, executed a deed of gift of all his property in favour of his wife and minor sons, the plaintiffs. B, one of his then existing creditors, subsequently obtained a decree against him, and in execution sold part of the said property. At the sale, the first defendant, by means of false representation, became the purchaser at an inadequate price. In July 1879, A applied to have the sale set aside, on the ground of the fraud of the first defendant, but his application was rejected. In 1884 the plaintiffs by their next friend sued to set aside the sale, contending that at the date of B's decree the property was theirs by virtue of the deed of gift of June 1875, and further that the sale was void by reason of the defendant's fraud. Held, rejecting the plaintiffs' claim, that the plaintiffs could not be allowed to set up their deed of gift as against the proceedings in execution under which the defendant acquired his title as purchaser. That gift was made to them by A when he was in pecuniary difficulties, and included all A's property. It was, therefore, void as against his then existing creditors, of whom B was one. B was, therefore, entitled to sell the property in execution of his decree. HORMUSJI v. COWASJI

18. ——————— Sale to creditor for old debt and new advance on debtor's bankruptcy—Intent to delay and defeat creditors—Boná fide of purchaser—Fraudulent preference—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5.—On the 27th February 1886, the firm of Ranchhod Jamna, a family firm, was on the point of failing, being heavily indebted. On that day, the managing member of the firm executed four sale-deeds, comprising all the property of the firm, in favour of four different creditors of the firm, of whom the plaintiff was one. The deed executed in favour of the plaintiff was in consideration of a then existing long-standing debt and a fresh advance of R3,400 made by him to the firm. The next day the firm stopped payment. The defendant was one of the creditors of the firm, and sought to attach and sell the property conveyed to the plaintiff in execution of a decree which the defendant had obtained against the firm. The plaintiff's objection to the attachment by the defendant having been disallowed, he brought the present suit against the defendant, to establish his right to the property attached under his sale-deed. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the sale to the plaintiff, having been effected in order to delay and defeat the creditors and to give undue preference to the plaintiff, was void. Held on the evidence that the sale to the plaintiff was, on the part of the plaintiff at least, a boná fide sale in consideration of a debt still due, and for payment of which the plaintiff had been pressing, and R3,400 in cash; and that there were no circumstances in the case which showed that the plaintiff in entering into it was a party to any scheme to delay the general body of the creditors. That being the case, the sale was not impeachable at the instance of the defendant; although, having regard to the fact of its having been negotiated on the eve of the failure of the firm, it might possibly be regarded as a sale by which the plaintiff obtained an unfair preference, and as such perhaps be impeachable at the suit of the whole body of creditors. In re Johnson : Goden v. *Gillam, L. or bankruptcy is involved, is not void. If a man owes another a real debt, and in satisfaction thereof sells to his creditor an equivalent portion of his property, transferring it to the vendee, and thereby extinguishing the debt, the transaction cannot be assailed, though the effect of it is to give the selected creditor a preference. Wood v. Dixie, 7 *Q. Pending a suit for recovery of a debt, the defendant, who was a Mahomedan, executed a deed of sale, dated in June 1882, of a four-annas zamindari share in favour of his wife, the consideration recited therein being the amount of the vendee's deferred dower-debt. Subsequently the creditor obtained a simple money-decree against the defendant, and in execution thereof attached the four-annas share. The vendee objected to the attachment on the basis of her sale-deed, but her objection was disallowed on the ground that the instrument was collusive. She thereupon brought a suit against the judgment-creditor for a declaration of her right, and to set aside the attachment order. Held that, if there was in fact a subsisting debt due for dower from the husband to the wife, and he transferred and she accepted the four-annas share in satisfaction of it, the transaction was a perfectly legitimate one, and no Court had any power to disturb it. It was for the defendant, the judgment-creditor, to establish either that the deferred dower-debt did not constitute such a present consideration as would support the sale, or that the transaction was merely colourable and a fictitious one, which was never intended to have operation or effect, either as a transfer of the property or an extinguishment of the dower-debt; and that, despite what appeared in the sale-deed, the parties remained in precisely the same position as before it was executed,—the four-annas still remaining the property of the vendor, and as such liable to the attachment. Held, applying the general principles of the Mahomedan law as to deferred debts, that there was good consideration for the sale of June 1882, and that, in the absence of proof of fraud of the kind above indicated, the vendee was entitled to maintain it, and to succeed in the suit. The deeds contained powers directing the trustees, after dividing the trust-moneys rateably among the assenting creditors, to pay "the residue, if any, after answering the several purposes aforesaid and also the debts or dividends upon the debts of all such creditors as shall decline to come in and execute or assent" to the said P; powers authorizing them to return to the debtor or permit him to retain such part of his household furniture, linen, and china as they might think fit; and powers authorizing them to carry on the debtor's business and employ him therein and in winding up his affairs. Held in the lower Court (TREVOR, J.) that an insolvent debtor in the mofussil may assign all his property to trustees for the benefit of the creditors who may assent to the conditions of the assignment; and such an assignment will be valid, although it may operate to defeat an expected execution, if it be the intention of the assignor to confer on the assenting creditors a substantial interest in the property assigned, and not merely to defeat or hinder a judgment-creditor. Such an assignment may be made to trustees, but it is not requisite that it should be made to trustees; and it is not requisite that it should be made directly to the assenting creditors. It will confer on the trustees a title to the property assigned superior to that of a judgment-creditor, who has obtained an order for attachment subsequently to the assignment. It is not invalid if made subject to a condition requiring assenting creditors to execute a release of the debtor, nor is it invalid if it declares a resulting trust in favour of the debtor; but semble—that the Court might order such resulting trust to be executed for the benefit of judgment-creditors who decline to assent to the assignment. Nor is it invalid if it empowers the trustees to permit the debtor to retain such portion of his furniture, linen, etc., as they may think fit; but this power should be exercised [illegible] the other assets are insufficient to discharge [illegible]ary objects of the trust. Nor is it invalid if [illegible]ain a power for the trustees to continue the [illegible]ess, if the power so given is ancillary to winding up the business and realizing the assets of the estate; nor is it invalid if executed only by a minority of the creditors. Nor can it be invalidated by subsequent negligence on the part of trustees. The question as to the intention of the debtor in executing such an assignment is a question of fact rather than of law; and in determining this question the conditions and trust subject to which the assignment is made may be considered. Held on appeal (per ROBERTS and PEARSON, JJ., MORGAN, C.J., dissenting) that the deeds were good deeds. A trader in the mofussil in failing circumstances may, in the absence of any statutory provision and of a bankrupt law, make a valid assignment of his property, before liens have attached upon it, or afterwards subject to such liens, to trustees simply for the purpose of having it distributed fairly among all his creditors, although it may defeat particular decree-holders and deprive them of their execution. Semble—Such a trust does not become inoperative by reason of the retirement of two out of three trustees and of the inability

This order was afterwards reversed as having been made without jurisdiction, but was standing when the bond in suit was executed by the decree-holders, now defendants, admitting money to be due to the plaintiff, and, as to a particular sum, promising payment out of the mesne profits when realized by them. The decree-holders, afterwards compromising with their judgment-debtor, abandoned the claim to mesne profits. This, however was no real concession, because the right to mesne profits had no existence. Although the unqualified admission of a debt implies a promise to pay it, yet this implication does not necessarily follow where there is an express promise to pay in a particular manner, and on a certain event happening. Held, on the construction of the bond, that here the admission was referable to the particular obligation agreed to be discharged only in the manner stipulated; and that therefore the payment was to be contingent on there being mesne profits. Held also that it had not been established that the non-occurrence of the condition had been occasioned by the conduct or default of the defendants, and that, therefore, the objection to pay the sum in question never took effect or became enforceable. —A debtor and the firm of which he was a member were adjudicated bankrupts in Mauritius, and a receiver was appointed by the Court. Subsequently the creditors met and resolved that, if the adjudication was annulled, a composition, payable by instalments, be accepted in full satisfaction of their debts, and that the security of the plaintiff's firm be accepted for payment of such composition, and that the bankrupts' estate be assigned to that firm, and that the plaintiff be appointed trustee to carry out such arrangement. An instrument was executed to give effect to these resolutions, and was concurred in by the receiver and approved by the Court, which annulled the adjudication, and ordered that the bankrupts' estate in Mauritius and India vest in the plaintiff, who was appointed trustee to carry out the said composition with full powers of realization. The plaintiff now sued to recover the moveable and immoveable property of the bankrupts in India. Held (1) that the above instrument was valid as a composition-deed, and did not require to be stamped and registered as a conveyance; and that any surplus that might remain after payment to the creditors did not belong to the plaintiff's firm, but was subject to a trust for the bankrupts; (2) that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount expended by him in payment of the creditors, together with such costs as were incurred by him in recovering debts due to the estate and could not be recovered from the debtors, and the costs of certain sales and a mortgage incurred in realization of the estate; (3) that plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession of the immoveable property until the sum due was paid to him by the defendants or was satisfied out of the rents and profits of the property. No order made by the Court at Mauritius can operate to transfer the ownership of immoveable property in British India. So held, without deciding that the Court cannot compel the bankrupt when within its jurisdiction to execute in favour of the trustee such a deed as will, in accordance with the formalities of the local law, render the order of the Court effectual. The deed stated that it was K's desire that the estate should remain in his family. After K's death, the plaintiff sued for an account and for redemption of some of K's land which had been originally mortgaged by K to the defendant. It was contended in defence that the deed created a trust for the payment of K's debts, and that the defendant was entitled to tack on to the mortgage debt a simple contract debt which K owed to him. It was found that the defendant was the only unpaid creditor, and that the property was more than sufficient to pay the debt. Held that the deed did not create a trust for K's creditors, the object, on the contrary, being the preservation of the family property. Held, further, that due effect could not be given to the whole of the instrument, unless construed as a conveyance to the plaintiff, charged as between himself and K with the payment of K's debts. Held also that during K's life his creditors could not claim to be paid under this instrument, in the absence of any communication between them and the plaintiff, capable of being construed as an admission by him that he held the property as trustee for them, although they might possibly impeach it. On K's death, however, his creditors would be entitled in an administration suit to have the charge of his debts enforced in their favour. RAGHO GOVIND v. BALVANT AMRIT

The plaintiff alleged that the decree had been fraudulently and collusively obtained on a bond in O T's name, which had been forged by J. The suit was brought on the 28th January 1878, and the plaintiff prayed that the sale might be cancelled, having been made in order to defeat his rights; that he might be declared the heir of O T; and that possession of the property with mesne profits might be awarded to him. Held on the evidence that the suit against B V was collusive, and that the sale in execution was in fraud of the plaintiff's right. He was, therefore, entitled to a decree declaring that he was not bound by the sale of the 3rd November 1875, in the suit brought by J against B V as representative of her deceased husband O T. Whether the plaintiff was entitled also to immediate possession of the property in the suit, depended on the question whether B V's life-estate was defeasible on her re-marriage. She belonged to a caste in which re-marriage was permitted. The following issue was accordingly sent to the lower Court for trial: "Whether, by the usage of the country, the rights and interests of B V by inheritance in her deceased husband's property, the subject of this suit, ceased and determined on re-marriage in 1876 as if she had then died." deed of mortgage of the property, which did not specifically state the amount of the estate mortgaged, and also a bond, upon which the obligee obtained a decree, in execution whereof he attached part of the property recorded in the name of the obligor. The members of the family brought a suit, in which they prayed for a declaration that the mortgage executed by the widow was invalid, and that the property was not liable for the amount due thereunder, or to attachment in execution of the decree obtained upon the bond. Held that, if the widow's possession were only a possession by the plaintiffs' consent entitling her merely to receive the profits for her maintenance, the plaintiffs might eject her from the property, and that, before they could obtain a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, they must seek their relief by ejectment, that being the substantial and real relief appropriate to the cause of action. On the other hand, if the widow had an estate in possession, given to her in exchange for her maintenance, she had an interest which she was competent to alienate. Held also that, inasmuch as the deed of mortgage contained no description of the amount of the estate mortgaged by the widow, and upon its face mortgaged her share of the property only, it could have no operation beyond her share, and the Court would not be justified in granting a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, merely because the plaintiffs apprehended some possible future claim based upon the allegation that the transfer comprised the entire estate. 74. ———— Suit by reversioner for possession—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Civil Procedure Code, s. 578.—A suit brought against K, the widow of R, a Hindu, by the representatives of R's brothers, H and P, for possession of his estate, ended in a compromise by which the defendant recognized the plaintiffs' rights, and conceded that the family was joint. After K's death, M, a daughter of R, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and, upon these findings, gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Held that the prayer in the plaint was wide enough to include a prayer for declaratory relief such as the first Court had given. Also that it could not be said that a daughter's son was not, under any condition, competent to maintain a declaratory suit of this nature during the lifetime of his mother or maternal aunt, in respect of his maternal grandfather's property, to the full ownership of which he had a reversionary right. Also that the awarding of declaratory relief, as regulated by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is a discretionary power which Courts of equity are empowered to exercise with reference to the circumstances of each case and the nature of the facts stated in the plaint, and the prayer of the plaintiff; that so long as a Court of first instance possesses jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory suit, and, entering into the merits of the case, arrives at right conclusions and awards a declaratory decree, such a decree cannot be reversed in appeal simply because the discretion has been improperly exercised; and that such improper exercise of discretion under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act has no higher footing than that of an error, defect, or irregularity, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, within the meaning of s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code. This does not imply that, even in cases where the discretionary power to award declaratory relief has been exercised wholly arbitrarily, and in a manner grossly inconsistent with judicial principles, the Court of appeal would have no power to interfere. Ram Kanaye Chuckerbutty v. *Prosunno Coomar Sein, 13 W. 92. ———— Denial of title without injurious act—Annoyance.—In suits for a declaration of title to a divided share of ancestral property, the ground alleged in each case for seeking the declaration was that the representatives of the brothers of the plaintiff's father had refused to be parties to the registering of the property in plaintiff's name, and had executed a deed of sale of it to a third party (third defendant), and registered him as the purchaser. The Court of first instance in each case decreed for the plaintiff. The Appellate Court, following Padagaligum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai, 2 Mad., 333, dismissed the suits on the ground that the plaintiffs were not in a position to maintain them. On special appeal,—Held that the suits should be remanded for a declaration of the plaintiff's title, if established. To maintain a suit for a declaration of title, some adverse act, intended and calculated to be prejudicial to the title which the plaintiff seeks a declaration of, must appear to have been done by the defendant. The mere denial of the title, or doing an act which causes annoyance, cannot imperil the plaintiff's title, nor have any serious effect on the quiet enjoyment of his proprietary right, and is not sufficient to support such a suit. The principle upon which the decision in Padagaligum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai proceeds is inapplicable to suits under s. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. KARYAN v. PERIA SIDDEN. He applied to the Court to have the sale set aside, but failing in his application he sued both the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser for a declaration of his title to the property in question. The Assistant Judge held on appeal that the suit was not maintainable on the grounds that a separate suit could not be brought, as the question of title was one for decision in the execution-proceedings, and that, even if the point could be raised in a separate suit, the present suit was premature, as the plaintiff should have waited till he was dispossessed by the auction-purchaser. Held that the suit was not premature. 134. ———— Suit for a mere declaration of title without consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Injunction—Amendment of plaint.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to succeed, on his father's death, to a talukhdari estate, to the exclusion of defendant No. 1, who, he alleged, was a supposititious child set up by his step-mother to defeat the plaintiff's right of inheritance. It appeared that defendant No. 1 had obtained a decree against the plaintiff's father, establishing his legitimacy and declaring him entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate in question. In accordance with this decree, the talukhdari settlement officer (defendant No. 2), who was in management of the estate under Act XXI of 1881, paid defendant No. 1 an allowance of R200 a month on account of his maintenance. The plaintiff alleged that the payment to defendant No. 1 was illegal and wrongful, but he did not ask for an injunction restraining him from receiving the allowance. The defendants contended that the suit was not maintainable because the plaintiff had sued for a mere declaration of title without asking for consequential relief. Held (CANDY, J., doubting) that the suit was barred under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiff had omitted to seek the relief of an injunction against defendant No. 1, restraining him from receiving future payment of maintenance. Held, further, that plaintiff was at liberty to amend his plaint by praying for an injunction as against both defendants. In that year the defendant company was formed for the purpose of taking over the business from him together with the capital and assets engaged therein. The nominal capital of the company was R25,00,000, divided into one thousand shares of R2,500 each. On the 22nd July 1864, an agreement carrying out the above object was executed between W W and the defendant company. This agreement set forth the assets and property to be transferred, and classified them as (a) "fixed assets," which consisted of immoveable property, buildings, etc., valued at R2,76,000 or thereabouts; and (b) assets other than fixed assets which consisted of what was called "forest operations," and of valuable contracts, rights, and concessions from the King of Burma, etc. The agreement further specified the consideration to be paid to W W for each of these classes of assets. For the "fixed assets" he was (under the 12th clause of the agreement) to receive one hundred fully paid-up shares of the company. Before the property was advertised for sale, the defendants, who were D's brothers, objected under s. 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), alleging that D was not the sole owner of the property; that they were joint owners with him; that they had set aside the property for religious purposes; and that D had no right to mortgage it. The Court executing the decree thereupon ordered that the applicants' (defendants') claim should be notified in the proclamation of sale. Plaintiff then filed a suit against the defendants, praying for a declaration that the property belonged to D exclusively, and the defendants had no right or interest in it. Held that, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. Court, whilst holding that the appointment of the pattamalı was invalid, dismissed the suit on the ground that the amendment had been made after the lapse of the period of limitation Held that the suit for a declaration would lie without consequential relief being prayed for, inasmuch as its object was not to establish any legal character or any right to any property in the plaintiffs but was in effect to have an act done by the other trustees in contravention of duty declared null and void Even if s 42 of the Specific Relief Act applied to such a decree, which was doubtful, no further relief than the declaration was necessary as the custody of the documents and jewels by the pattamalı was merely that of a servant under the trustees with whom the possession in fact and in law remained There was therefore nothing of which delivery could be sought from the possession of the pattamalı and no question of limitation arose JANARDANA SHETTI GOVINDARAJAN v BADAYA SHETTI GIRI

The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that the land on which the otta stood was his property, and not that of the Government. Held that, the public roads being vested by s. 37 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) in the Government of Bombay, they were "interested to deny" the plaintiff's title to the land, and therefore, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff (subject to the discretion of the Court) was entitled to a declaration as against the Government of his right to the land, and the plaintiff was not called upon to wait until the Government had taken possession of the land. It was contended that the jurisdiction of the Court to make the declaration prayed for was taken away by the last clause of s. 133, which provides that "no order made by a Magistrate under this section shall be called in question in any Civil Court." Held that the Magistrate's order under this section is not a conclusive determination of the question of title. 1. FORM OF DECREE.

(a) GENERAL CASES.

1. ———— Necessity for a decree—Act XIX of 1873 (N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act), ss. 113, 114, 115—Omission to frame decree in case in which a question of title is decided—Second appeal.—It is essential that in a suit under the Civil Procedure Code a decree should be drawn up. Held, therefore, that in a proceeding under s. 113 of the North-West Provinces Land Revenue Act, where the rights of the parties are decided, a decree should be drawn up giving effect to the decision. An Assistant Collector passed a decision under s. 113 declaring the rights of the parties, but did not draw up a decree giving effect to such decision. There was an appeal to the District Court from such decision, which made a decree affirming it. Held by STUART, C.J., on second appeal, that the defect arising from the want of a decree on the record of the Court of first instance was a bar to the hearing of the second appeal, and the proceedings of the District Court should be set aside, and the case should be sent back to the Assistant Collector in order that he might frame a decree. Held by STRAIGHT, J., that the decree of the District Court was appealable, such defect notwithstanding, and the appeal should be decreed, and the decree of the District Court reversed, and the case be sent back to the Assistant Collector for the purpose aforesaid. An appeal by the plaintiff was entertained by the Subordinate Judge, who passed a decree for specific performance, and decreed that, if the deficient Court-fees were paid, possession should be given to the plaintiff, but that, on failure to pay the Court-fees, the claim for possession should be dismissed. Held that, the plaintiff not having in the first instance paid the full Court-fees, he should have been called upon by the Munsif to do so. As this was not done, the Court of

After ineffectual attempts to realize his debt, the plaintiff applied to the Court for liberty to sell the mortgaged premises. Held that the Court had a discretionary power to grant or refuse the sale. The note at the end of the decree did not amount to an absolute prohibition against the sale, but was merely meant as a guide to the Court which should have to execute the decree, and to show that execution should not issue against the equity of redemption, except by special leave of the Court. Subsequently, in 1879, M R sued for a decree for sale of all the property mentioned above, but the decree which he obtained was limited to the village Ahak and the share in Khera Buzurg. K D was not made a party to this suit. In 1882, one M M A purchased the share in Surajpur, which had been subject to the mortgage sued upon by M R in 1879, but had been exempted from the decree obtained by M R in 1879. In 1892 K D sued for redemption of M R's prior mortgage of 1867 and for a declaration of his right upon such redemption to bring to sale the property comprised in the mortgage. Held that, inasmuch as M R's interest in the mortgaged property had been limited by the decree of 1879 to the village of Ahak and the share in Khera Buzurg, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for the sale of the share purchased by M M A in Surajpur. It is, no doubt, open for each and every co-sharer to ask to have his share divided off and allotted to him (in which case he would have to pay court-fees according to his share). But, in the absence of such a request, the Court is not bound to determine what is the share of each of the co-sharers, and to compel him to take that share by making a general partition. In such a case the High Court refused, in second appeal, to accede to the prayer of some of the co-sharers, who had not appeared in the Court of first instance, to have their shares divided off and allotted to them. The plaintiff in that suit afterwards obtained entry of his name as a co-sharer in the villages in the register kept under Act XVII of 1876, s. 56; and then brought the first of the present suits for his share upon partition, both in that estate as it stood in 1865, and also with the addition of villages since acquired out of profits, claiming an account against the talukhdari. The latter alleged, among other defences, that the talukhdari estate was impartible, and brought a cross-suit to establish this, and also that it was held by him according to the rule of primogeniture, the right of other members of the family being only to the profits. Held that, in regard to the order of Her Majesty above mentioned, which was applicable to an estate held subject to the law of the Mitakshara, the talukhdari estate could not be declared to be impartible; also that a declaration in the Judicial Commissioner's decree that a member of the family entitled to a share upon partition should hold it as an under-proprietor under the talukhdar could not be allowed to stand. It also appeared that on a part of the same land there had formerly stood a thatched building used as a "sitting place" by the residents of the mohulla. The lower Appellate Court, while decreeing the claim, observed that the defendants, if they liked, could construct and use a shed "according to the old state of things" and "without offering obstruction to" the right of the plaintiffs to "use it as a sitting place when necessary." Held that this was not a declaration of a right in the defendants to build, but merely a statement that the decree would not operate as an interference with the rights of the parties to have a similar thatched building set up as had existed in former times. Official Trustee of Bengal v. *Krishna Chunder Mozoomdar, I. 192. ———— Construction of a decree as to the appointment of a manager of the property of a religious institution.—A decree of the Hight Court declared its holder entitled, as the pandara sannadhi, or religious chief, of an adhinam, to see that a competent person, from among the tambirans who had received initiation at that institution, was appointed to fill the then vacant office of tambiran, managing certain matts. The decree directed that the pandara should name a tambiran of his adhinam for the office, whom, after inquiry as to his fitness, the subordinate Court should appoint. If that Court found him unfit, it was to appoint a tambiran of that adhinam upon its own selection. In execution, the pandara named a tambiram for the office, but died before the inquiry as to his fitness. His successor, as head of the adhinam, petitioned to withdraw the nomination, naming another tambiran. The subordinate Court made an order disallowing the withdrawal, and, after inquiry as to the fitness of the first-named tambiran, appointed him to the office. The High Court, on the pandara's appeal, decided that the first nomination had been competently withdrawn, and directed an inquiry as to the fitness of the person secondly named, finding on the evidence that the first-named was not fit. Held that on the construction of the decree the first nomination could not be withdrawn and a second one substituted before the inquiry, and that the person first named was entitled to the Court's decision as to his fitness. On the facts, the finding of the High Court that the first-named tambiran was unfit was not affirmed, and the order of the Subordinate Judge was maintained. (j) HINDU WIDOW.

196. ———— Hindu widow—Construction of order made by Settlement Officer awarding estate to a Hindu widow—Transfer by widow, Effect of.—The plaintiffs obtained a declaratory decree that they were the reversioners and heirs apparent, expectant on the future death of a widow who, at the time of suit, had survived two co-widows, and that they, the plaintiffs, would be entitled to inherit at her death the estate that had belonged to the deceased husband. All parties had proceeded, as far as to the present appeal, on the view that the surviving widow had the widow's estate only. But an order made in the course of the settlement operations in 1865 had conferred the estate of the deceased on the three widows as well as on his mother, in equal shares of one-fourth each. Held that there was nothing in this order to show an intention to give to the mother and widows anything more than an interest, such as that which a Hindu widow takes; and that the inheritance would devolve in due course of law, an alienation which the widow had made operating only for her lifetime. He then took out execution, attached, sold, and himself purchased the property in question. The opposite party objected, but the Judge allowed the execution to proceed, and deputed an ameen to ascertain the amount of mesne profits collected. Held that the decree of the Privy Council could not be held to include restitution of everything that the decree-holder would have enjoyed had the property not been sold in execution. In 1884 the plaintiff sought, in execution of this decree, to recover his share of the profits of the village for the years 1882-83 and 1883-84. Held that the plaintiff could not proceed to enforce his rights under the decree by way of execution. His remedy was by a suit on the right established by the decree. The decree had merely declared the right of the plaintiff to a certain share of produce, and payment was ordered of mesne profits computed according to certain principles. Such an award was not an award of a periodical payment in æternum. The very word "mesne" implied a terminus ad quem as well as á quo, and, in the absence of a special order, the terminus was the date of the decree. On the 18th March 1872, an order was passed by the Recorder of Rangoon, which was as follows: "By consent the property subject to the equitable mortgage to be given up to the plaintiff in satisfaction of all claims and demands against the defendant under the decree of the High Court." On the 3rd July 1872 the Recorder directed the defendant to execute within six days a conveyance of the mortgaged property to the plaintiff. On the 11th July 1872 the Recorder declared that, if the conveyance was not executed within twenty-four hours by the defendant, the Court would execute it, and accordingly on the 12th July 1872 the Court executed the conveyance. Held that the Recorder had no power to pass the order of the 18th March 1872, and that the defendant could not be required to execute the conveyance. The decree was for a total amount of R1,282. Subsequently, on application by the decree-holder, and without giving notice to the judgment-debtor, the Court which passed the decree, purporting to act under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, altered the decree and made it for a sum of R1,460. The decree-holder took out execution, and the judgment-debtor objected that the decree was for R1,282 and had been improperly altered. The Court executing the decree disallowed the objection on the ground that it was not such as could be entertained in the execution department. Held that the decree, as it originally stood, was in accordance with the judgment, and the Court had no power to alter it as it did; and the proceeding was further irregular, in that no notice was given to the opposite party as required by s. 206 of the Code. 296. ———— Decree in favour of plaintiff—Rectification of decree on application of defendant—Practice—Objection taken at hearing that application made to Court was not the application of which notice had been given to opposite party—Preliminary point.—The plaintiffs sued in 1877 for specific performance of an agreement, dated 27th September 1871, by which certain landed properties were to be divided, as specified in the agreement between them and the defendants. The case came on for hearing on the 13th September 1878. The defendants did not appear, and a decree ex-parte was made, which declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the agreement of the 27th September 1871 specifically performed, and referred the suit to the commissioner for the preparation of conveyances, etc. The decree was sealed on the 9th October 1878. No further steps were taken by any of the parties for six years, and in September 1884 the matter was first brought before the commissioner. He then directed the defendants to lodge with him all the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the plaintiffs as their share. The defendants thereupon applied that the plaintiffs should be directed to lodge the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to them, but the commissioner refused to make this order, being of opinion that he was not authorized to do so under the decree, which contained no direction to him in respect thereof. The defendants on the 10th November 1884 gave notice to the plaintiffs that they would apply to the Court—(1) "to set aside or vary its order of the 13th September 1878, so far as it related to the lodging of title-deeds, etc.; (2) to appoint a receiver of certain properties mentioned in the agreement; (3) to order the plaintiffs to deliver up to the defendants the properties which belonged to their share under the agreement; (4) to order certain accounts to be taken." This motion was not brought on until the 10th September 1885, on which day it was dismissed with costs; the Judge holding that the defendants had not shown sufficient cause to justify the setting aside of the decree under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiffs having still kept possession of certain of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the defendants, notice was given by the defendants to the plaintiffs on the 28th April 1887 that they would apply to the Court for an order that the plaintiffs should perform their part of the agreement of the 27th September 1871, so far as it remained unperformed by them, by giving up to the defendants possession of certain properties and by accounting for the rents thereof, etc., etc. At the hearing of this motion, counsel for the defendants asked that the decree should be rectified, by directing that the agreement should be specifically performed by the plaintiffs and defendants respectively. Held that the defendants were entitled to have the decree rectified. The fact that the decree declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the agreement of the 27th September 1871 specifically performed implied an order for specific performance of that agreement by all the parties to it. The mandatory words, however, as against the plaintiffs, having been, in the first instance, omitted, might now be inserted in the decree, so as to put the decree into the ordinary and usual form of decree in cases of this nature. The Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are within its power, and it can set right any mistake in them. Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the defendants were not entitled, in the present motion, to ask for a rectification of the decree, inasmuch as their notice of motion did not intimate that the point would be raised. Held that such an objection ought to be taken at once as a preliminary point. As it was not made until the argument of counsel for the defendants was concluded, it should be taken that the form of the motion as made to Court was acquiesced in. The objection was then too late. 297. ———— Decree for redemption within specified time—Appeal against decree—Power of Court in execution to extend time for redemption allowed by decree—Special ground for enlarging time.—The plaintiffs sued for the redemption of certain mortgaged property. On the 1st March 1886, a decree was passed declaring the plaintiffs entitled to redeem on payment by them to the defendants of R649-11-0 within three months from the date of the decree. Against this decree the defendants (the mortgagees) appealed on the ground that a much larger sum than R649-11-0 was due to them on the mortgage. The plaintiffs also filed objections to this decree under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been long ago paid off, and that now a large sum was due to them from the mortgagees, who had been in receipt of the profits of the property. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs did not pay the R649-11-0 within three months as ordered by the decree. On the 12th October 1886, they presented an application for execution, and paid into Court the R649-11-0. The lower Court granted their application, and ordered

Application to insert in decree an order to pay value of such moveable property in event of failure to deliver—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 206-8.—A partition suit brought by a son against his father was referred to arbitration. On the 9th January 1890, the award was published, and on the 27th March 1890 the defendant moved for and obtained a decree in terms of the award. By this decree it was ordered that in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim the defendant should pay to him R1,05,000 in the manner therein stated, viz., R40,000 to be paid forthwith and the balance of R65,000 to be paid "upon the plaintiff's delivering to the defendant certain specified property, which included two vessels or buglows, called respectively the Nasri and Sambuk." In no event was defendant to be required to pay the R65,000 before the 15th November 1890. At the date of the decree the vessel Sambuk was at sea on a voyage, and on the 18th June 1890, while still on the voyage, she was lost. On the 15th November 1890, the plaintiffs' attorneys demanded payment of the balance of R65,000. They offered to deliver the other properties specified in the decree, but stated that the vessel Sambuk had been lost. They offered to pay its value, which they estimated at R1,000. The defendants, however, demanded the delivery of the buglows, which they stated to be worth a very large sum. The defendants having, under the circumstances, refused to pay the R65,000, the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree, which was refused. He then obtained a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why the decree of the 27th March should not be amended or rectified by stating therein the amount of money to be paid to the defendant as an alternative if delivery of the vessel Sambuk could not be made, such delivery having become impossible. Held that the rule must be discharged. The objection was an objection to an award, not to a decree. Possibly it might have been open to the parties to object to the award before it was filed on the ground that it ought to have stated a sum to be paid to the defendant in case some of the property could not be delivered to him. If such an objection had been made, the Court might possibly have remitted the award or refused to file it. No such objection, however, was taken, and the award was filed and a decree obtained in accordance with the award. The award could not be modified by the Court, nor could the decree, which must be in accordance with the award. AHMED BIN ESSA KHALIFFA v. ESSA BIN KHALIFFA

The sum of R1,000 was paid on the date of the agreement in part payment of the price. The plaintiff sued for specific performance of the agreement. The plaint set forth the facts and the part payment, and prayed that the defendant might be ordered specifically to perform the agreement and to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the purchase-money, viz., the sum of R4,475. On the 9th September 1897, judgment was given for the plaintiff ordering "specific performance as prayed and costs." The decree was accordingly drawn up in terms of the prayer of the plaint. It was afterwards discovered that the sum mentioned in the prayer (viz., R4,475) and inserted in the decree was incorrect, and ought to have been R4,775, the latter being the real balance due at the rate mentioned in the agreement after deducting the R1,000 paid as earnest. When all had attained full age, two having been minors at the testator's death, they effected a separation of their interests derived from the will, and executed to one another instruments of compromise and partition containing words relating to possible claims which they gave up. One of the two younger brothers afterwards died, having taken, under the will of the other younger one, all the estate of the latter, who had died without issue before him. He was requested to call a caste meeting to consider the matter; he did so, and placed the letters before the meeting, and it was then resolved to warn the plaintiff. The warning was, however, unheeded. So a second meeting was called by the defendant. Plaintiff sent her brother and sister's husband to the meeting in order that they might defend her. But they offered no explanation on her behalf. Witnesses were then heard and ten persons selected to decide what should be done. Defendant was one of those ten, and he communicated to the general meeting the decision they had come to—namely, that the plaintiff should be excommunicated. The meeting unanimously adopted this decision, and the defendant announced the decision of the caste to the gor for him to promulgate. The plaintiff thereupon sued to recover from the defendant R5,249 as damages for defamation. Held that the defendant was not guilty of defamation. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to enquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses, and reported the result of his enquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him. The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500, and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge. On appeal the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteath, the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under excep. 8 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. He therefore reversed the conviction under s. 211 and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code. Against this order of acquittal, Government appealed to the High Court. Held that the accused was guilty of defamation. Held also that, in the absence of sanction from Government, the inquiry held by Mr. Monteath, the District Magistrate, was not a "taking cognizance" of the offence. Held further that, as Mr. Monteath was not sitting as a "Court" when he made the inquiry and examined the accused, the accused was not entitled to claim an absolute protection from a charge of defamation as a witness in a judicial proceeding. The accused was only entitled to a qualified privilege depending on the exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KARIGOWDA

3. ——— Necessity for plaintiff to prove superior title.—It is essential that a claimant, seeking to oust a party in possession of an estate, should establish his own right to the estate, and not rely upon the failure of the title impeached. A decree of the Sudder Court held that, although the title set up by the plaintiff was wholly bad, yet that a party defendant with whom the plaintiff had, by a deed of compromise, agreed to divide the estate, had shown his title, and on that ground decreed possession against the other defendant. Such decree reversed by the Privy Council on appeal, as the effect of the decree would be (1) to defeat the defendant's possessory title without giving him an opportunity of contesting the title of the party by whom he is turned out of possession, and (2) as it was a violation of legal principles which protect possession and of the substantial principles of justice which regulate the joinder of parties and union of titles to sue in one suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court Held that, the land being found to be the plaintiff's, the Courts could not compel him to part with his legal rights and accept compensation against his will, however reasonable it might appear to be. This is also the law in India, with the exception that the party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building. Delay by the owner in bringing a suit is not in itself sufficient to create an equity

Bishop—Suit for partition of the endowment—In the year 1806, a fund was started by a caste of Roman Catholic boatmen in Royapuram for the purpose of supplying the religious wants of the caste, and in 1829 the Church of St Peter at Royapuram was erected. The fund was under the control of the Government Marine Board, which in 1830, in consequence of disputes between the headmen of the caste, suspended all payment. In 1863 a member of the caste, claiming to be sole surviving headman, brought a suit against Government for a declaration that he was sole surviving headman, and as such entitled to the sole management of the funds then in the hands of Government, which funds the Government paid into Court to the credit of the said suit. By the decree in this suit it was declared that the fund in question belonged to the whole body of Roman Catholic boatmen in Royapuram, that it must be devoted to the religious observances of the body, and that it rested with that body to determine whether in spiritual matters the Church should continue under the Vicar Apostolic or the Goanese Bishop of Mylapore In 1886 a concordat was executed between the Pope of Rome and the King of Portugal, the effect of which was to place St. Peter's Church within the territorial jurisdiction of the Vicar Apostolic. Plaintiffs, who were members of the Goanese party, complained that, having regard to the effect of the concordat of 1886, it would be impossible for their party —even if in a majority—to elect a priest of their own party, and prayed for a division of the fund. Held that, even if this were so, this fact would not justify the Court in taking away from St. Peter's Church part of its endowment. ENDOWMENT—continued.

property was not a public, religious, and charitable trust; that he was not a trustee; that the plaintiffs had no right to sue; and that the suit was time-barred. Held (1) that, having regard to the fact that a certain number of the public had always used the temple, that there was attached to it a dharmashala, and that the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadavart, the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public, religious, and charitable purposes; (2) that although the defendant was not appointed a trustee, yet by taking charge of the endowment, and purporting to manage it as temple property, he made himself a constructive trustee, and was liable as such to the beneficiaries. JUGALKISHORE v. LAKSHMANDAS RAGHUNATH DAS [I. L. R., 23 Bom., 659

7. ——— Madras Regulation VII of 1817—Order of Revenue Board appointing manager—Suit by trustees for possession.—The suit was brought by the trustees of certain pagodas for the recovery of six villages for the defendant on behalf of the pagodas, and to declare a copper sanad, purporting to be an ancient grant on which defendant based his title, a forgery. The District Judge considered that the evidence sufficiently established that the title to the villages was in the temples, and not in the defendant, but he was also of opinion that, as defendant had been lawfully placed in management by the Board of Revenue in 1858, he was entitled to hold the villages for life. He therefore declared plaintiff's reversionary title as trustee of the temples on the death of the defendant. Defendant appealed from this decision as to the title, and plaintiff appealed as to the part of the decree which refused him immediate possession of the property. Held by INNES, J., that the title to manage must reside in the pagoda if it did not reside in the defendant, that the evidence abundantly negatived the title of the defendant, and that plaintiff was entitled to possess and manage the property as trustee of the temples. Upon the question whether plaintiff was precluded from recovering during the lifetime of defendant, by reason of the order of 1858, placing defendant in possession,—Held that the Government could not create a valid title to more than they themselves possessed; that they had simply taken over the possession and management of the endowment, and afterwards given it over to defendant; that by so doing they relieved themselves of the trust they had undertaken under Regulation VII of 1817, but did not thereby appoint defendant a manager under Regulation VII of 1817. 8. ——— Hindu or Mahomedan religious endowment, Alienation or pledge of—Bombay Act II of 1863, s. 8, cl. 3—Common law of the country.—Religious endowments in this country, whether they are Hindu or Mahomedan, are not alienable; though the annual revenues of such endowments, as distinguished from the corpus, may occasionally, when it is necessary to do so in order to raise money for purposes essential to the temple or other institution endowed, but not further or otherwise, be pledged. Bombay Act II of 1863, s. 8, cl. 3, contained no new law, but merely declared the pre-existing common law of this country. NARAYAN v. CHINTAMAN . . . I. L. R., 5 Bom., 393

9. ——— Charity—Family idols—Sale of trust property in execution—Suit by trustee to recover the property—Limitation.—The Hindu law, unlike the English law with respect to charities, makes no distinction between a religious endowment having for its object the worship of a household idol and one which is for the benefit of the general public. In execution of decrees against the plaintiff as the representative of his deceased father and brother, certain lands were sold to the first defendant. The plaintiff sued to recover them, alleging that the former owner of the lands had assigned them to his (the plaintiff's) brother and himself (the plaintiff) and their descendants by a deed of gift to perpetuate the worship of the donor's household idol. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the property. The gift was a valid one, creating a religious endowment under the Hindu law, and that the plaintiff's suit was not to set aside the sale, but was one by the trustee of the endowment to recover the property to which the limitation of twelve years was applicable. 10. ——— Charitable endowment—Trust property sold in execution—Rights of heirs of the creator of the trust against execution-purchaser.—A trust-deed of certain property executed by the member of a Hindu family provided that neither he nor his heirs should incumber or alienate it, but that in case of necessity his heirs might maintain themselves out of the income while administering the trust of a certain charity. The provisions of the trust were not proved to have been observed by the settlor or his family, and the settlor on one occasion disclaimed the trust. The trust property was attached and sold in execution of personal decrees passed against the settlor and another member of his family. The widow of the latter, after the death of the settlor, sued to recover the land from the execution-purchaser as heir to the settlor. Held the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the land. Rupa Jagshet v. *Krishnaji Govind, I. Those trustees dealt with the property in a manner inconsistent with the trust by making alienations thereof as if it were their own private property. In 1893 the representative in title of the original settlor sued in the Court of the District Judge of Gorakhpur to have certain alienations made by the said trustees set aside and the property restored to its original uses, and for the appointment of a new trustee or new trustees in pleae

In a suit by a zamindar for enhancement, brought after Act X of 1859 came into operation, against the holder at a fixed rent of a dependent talukh, the later is protected from enhancement by the provisions of s. 15 of that Act, notwithstanding decrees pronounced in previous litigation between the parties declaring the zamindar's right to enhance, and directing that the rent of the talukh should be assessed at pargana rates, if it appear that the rent never has been assessed at pargana rates and never has been enhanced, but has remained unchanged from the time of the Permanent Settlement. 2. LIABILITY TO ENHANCEMENT—concluded.

116. ——— Agreement not to enhance, Duration of Liability to enhancement. On the 27th June 1866 it was agreed between B, a zamindar, and D, a raiyat, that the latter should pay R20 annually as the rent of his holding, and that for the future no further sum in excess should be demanded or suit brought for enhancement of rent. The settlement of the district where the land in respect of which the agreement was made was situate expired on 1st July 1870. B having subsequently enhanced D's rent to R40, D brought a suit to contest his liability to pay enhanced rent, basing his suit on the agreement of 27th June 1866. The lower Courts held that B was not bound by the agreement after the expiry of the settlement in force at the time of the agreement, and directed D to pay an enhanced rate of rent. In special appeal D's claim was decreed. DEOJEET v. BHUGWANT . 6 N. W., 373

Shortly afterwards, the defendants executed a kabuliat at a reduced rate, for eleven years ending the 31st Assin 1282 (16th October 1875). After the term had expired, the plaintiffs sought to recover rent from the defendants at the rate settled by the decree of 1864. Held that the decree had been superseded by the subsequent arrangement, and that the plaintiffs could not recover rent at an enhanced rate, except under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. 201. ——— Partition—Evidence of previous enhancement in a suit by another co-zamindar—Talukh—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 17.—More than twenty years before the institution of a suit for the enhancement of the rent of a share in a dependent talukh, the zamindari under which the talukh was held was partitioned under a batwara among three zamindars. A ten-anna share was allotted to one (the present plaintiff), a four-anna share to another, and a two-anna share to a third. The talukhdars continued to hold the entire property, and paid the rent apportioned by law severally to each of the parties entitled. In 1861, the owner of the two-anna share obtained a decree against the talukhdars for enhancement of the rent of his share. In the present suit against the same talukhdars, the defendants contended that the rent of their talukh had not been changed for a period of more than twenty years before suit. Held that the "talukh," which was intended by s. 17 of the Rent Act, was the original talukh; and that, if the defendants could show that the rent of that talukh had remained unchanged, either in its original entirety or apportioned as it had been under the batwara, they would be entitled to the benefit of the section; but that the decree in the suit of 1861 had the effect of enhancing the rent payable for the whole talukh, and that the plaintiff could avail herself of that decree, although she was not a party to it. The general rule may be stated to be that the plaintiff is not, on the one hand, restricted to a comparison with lands immediately contiguous, and must not, on the other, pick and choose particular places, but should consider the rates prevailing in all the neighbouring places which are similarly circumstanced. The enhancement need not be to some rate which is actually paid. Where different raiyats holding similar lands with similar advantages in places adjacent pay at different but higher rates for lands of the same description and quality, and the only question is the extent to which the defendant is liable to enhancement, the clause must not be so construed as to deprive a zamindar of his fair rents; but the Court should be guided by a consideration of what is fair and equitable, as provided by s. 5, subject to the limitations prescribed in s. 17. If a generally prevailing rate cannot be found, the currency of the different rates being so nearly equal as to make it impossible to say which is the prevailing rate, the Court is not in error in taking an average. They are then conclusive between the same parties, not because they are the statements of those parties, but because, for all purposes of present and prospective litigation, they must be taken as truth. A brought a pauper suit, and virtually denied possession of certain property. B petitioned to dispauper A, alleging that A was possessed of such property. That decree was founded on a deed purporting to be a deed of conditional sale dated the 24th December 1853 executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant. The plaintiff alleged that the deed was executed in order to protect the property against the claims of plaintiff's son, and the plaintiff sought to set it aside on account of defendant's breach of an agreement dated the 16th January 1856, whereby the defendant stipulated that plaintiff's possession should not be disturbed. The defendant, inter alia, pleaded estoppel. Held that plaintiff was not estopped from showing the real truth of the transaction between plaintiff and defendant, and from obtaining relief through the Court against defendant's breach of good faith, because of plaintiff's attempt to hinder or defeat the possible claim of a third party, the maxim "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis" not being applicable without qualification to India, where justice, equity, and good conscience require no more than that a party should be precluded from contradicting, to the prejudice of another, an instrument pretending to the solemnity of a deed, when the parties claiming under it or their representatives have been induced to alter their position on the faith of such instrument. 73. ————Mortgage fraudulently made to defeat execution of decree—Right of mortgagor to sue subsequently to recover possession.—In 1851 T obtained a decree against G, the father of the plaintiff. In order to defeat the execution of that decree, G, in collusion with one B, permitted the latter to obtain a decree based upon an award against him, and to sell the land in execution, at which sale B himself and another person purchased it. In 1857 these purchasers sold the property to V (defendant No. 1). In 1858 T attached the land in execution of his decree, but the attachment was raised on the application of defendants Nos. 1 and 3, who alleged that the property was theirs. In 1876 the plaintiff, who was the son of G, sued the defendants to recover possession. He alleged that the transaction was only ostensibly a sale, but was really a mortgage made by his father to the defendants, and that the defendants held as mortgagees. Two documents were produced (exhibits 19 and 18), dated respectively in the years 1855 and 1862, whereby defendant No. 1 as a mortgagee acknowledged the receipt of two sums of R375 from G. It further appeared that on the faith of exhibit 18 the defendants had been permitted to remain in possession for ten years without disturbance as mortgagees. The subordinate Courts held that the decree, sale, and re-sale of the lands were fraudulent and collusive transactions, and that, G having been a party to the fraud, the plaintiff could not recover the lands from the defendants. On appeal,—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover; that the defendants, having accepted repayment of R750 as mortgagees, and, as such, having

One of them (D) subsequently died, leaving a will disposing of her share to her relatives. Steps were taken during D's life by the other widow (M) and by H to resist the registration of the will; and after D's death M applied for the attachment of D's share and the appointment of a curator. Her application being dismissed, she commenced a regular suit. Held that M's original acquiescence in the title set up by H did not deprive her of any rights which accrued to her as one of the co-heirs of her husband when that claim was decided to be untenable, nor could her alleged alienation of her share bar her present suit. The plaintiff attained his majority in 1878. Held that, whether the cause of action arose in 1865 or 1867, it was equally barred from 1879 : and that the plaintiff was bound by the deed of relinquishment. Assuming the plaintiff was a minor of 15 years of age at the date of the deed of relinquishment, it is not likely he would not have understood its effect, or that he failed to ascertain it when he attained his majority in 1878. II, art. 15—Suit for possession.* —In certain execution-proceedings land was attached, but before the sale the judgment-debtors, with the permission of the Court, sold the land to the plaintiffs. Previous to this sale, certain persons had come forward in the execution-proceedings, and had claimed the land as having been sold to them by the father of the judgment-debtors: this claim was disallowed in November 1876. In 1881 the plaintiffs, alleging that they had been dispossessed by certain persons, amongst whom were the claimants in the execution-proceedings, brought a suit to recover possession of this land against these persons. This suit was decided against the plaintiffs in the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that they had failed to prove that they had been in possession of the land twelve years before suit. On appeal to the High Court, the plaintiffs, appellants, contended that the claim of the defendants in the execution-proceedings having been rejected, and they not having brought a regular suit within one year from the order of rejection to establish their right to possession, the defendants were prevented by that order from contending that the plaintiffs had not been in possession at the time of that order. Held that the order did not operate as an estoppel against the defendants; and even if it could so operate, it would not do so until the time had run out within which they could have brought a suit to establish their right to possession, and that such time had not expired. No suit was brought to question this order The first mortgage was not paid off, and the mortgage premises were brought to sale The purchaser, who was the first mortgagee, now sued for possession of the land, and his claim was resisted by the second mortgagee Held (1) that the non-joinder of the present defendant in the suit on the mortgage constituted no bar to the present suit ; (2) that the second mortgagee was estopped

121. ———————— Estoppel caused by representation on which action has followed—Title, as between rival purchasers supported by an estoppel affecting the assignee of the person estopped—Notice.—The law enacted in the Evidence Act, 1872, s. 115, relating to estoppel as a consequence of declaration, act, or omission causing another's belief, and action thereon, does not differ from the English law on that subject, of which the general principle is stated in Cairncross v. Lorimer, 3 H. L. C., 829. The main question, in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act, or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent, or that he should not have been under a mistake or misapprehension. The word "intentionally" seems to have been used in s. 115 for the purpose of declaring the law as it had been stated to be in judgments in England. On this point, the opinions expressed in the judgments in Ganga Sahai v. Hirah Singh, I. L. R., 2 All., 809, and in Vishnu v. Krishnan, I. L. R., 7 Mad., 3, referred to and disaffirmed. A widow had held benami, for her husband during his life, property as to which he had executed a hibanama in her favour. After his death, she mortgaged the property, her son representing her in the transaction. After her death, in a suit between rival purchasers of part of the property comprised in the hibanama and in the mortgage, the plaintiff derived his title from the son, having purchased his inherited share of the estate, while the defendants relied on a purchase at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagee. Held that s. 115 of the Evidence Act was applicable. The son had represented that the hiba gave a right to his mother to mortgage, and consequently neither he nor his representative in estate could be allowed to deny the truth of this representation, intentionally made on his part, which also had been acted on by the mortgagee; and it made no difference that the son had not had a fraudulent intention. As a result of the estoppel upon the son, any purchaser of the mortgagee's interest, at a sale regularly carried out, would have acquired a valid title to the property, although such purchaser might have been fully aware of all the circumstances. P. Rent Act in force in 1879), and for ejectment of the vendees, who had obtained possession of the land. It was found that the zamindars had consented to the sale to the vendees, and received from them arrears of rent due on the holding by the vendors, and had recognized them as tenants. Held by OLDFIELD, J. (whose opinion prevailed), that sales of occupancy-rights were not void under s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873, when made with the consent of the landlord; that the sale which the zamindars had consented to was valid; and that, under any circumstances, they were estopped by their conduct from bringing a suit to set aside the sale. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That the sale-deed was invalid with reference to the provisions of ss. 2 and 23 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as its object was the transfer of occupancy-rights, which was prohibited by s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873. Having failed in that suit, plaintiff brought the present suit to recover half the property on the basis of a family agreement made between her and the present defendant's deceased husband. This agreement was designedly suppressed at the period of the former suit. Held that the suit should be dismissed; that plaintiff in the present suit insisted upon a valid family compact varying the ordinary rules of inheritance, having, however, previously appealed to that general rule and designedly kept back the compact upon which she now sought to insist; and that there could be no stronger case of an absolute waiver of that contract and of conduct rendering it wholly inequitable to permit her now to insist upon it. Semble—Where a defendant has been sued by a plaintiff upon his right of ownership, plaintiff's recovery negatives all grounds of defence to that action then existent and within the plaintiff's knowledge. 160. ———— Omission to assert a claim in execution-proceedings—Execution of decree.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were sued by a creditor of their undivided grand-uncle D as his legal representatives, and a decree was obtained against them as such. In execution of that decree, the house in dispute was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff. After satisfying the decree, the surplus of the sale-proceeds was paid to the defendants, who received it and divided it between themselves. Plaintiff, having been obstructed by the defendants in obtaining possession of the house, brought the present suit to recover possession. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the house was the undivided family property of the defendants, and that the plaintiff should bring a partition suit. The plaintiff appealed to the Assistant Judge, who was of opinion that the defendant's omission to set up their title to the property in question at the execution-sale and the acceptance of the surplus of the proceeds of sale estopped them from impeaching the sale and setting up their title. He therefore reversed the lower Court's decree, and awarded the house to the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court,—Held, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the defendants were not estopped from setting up their title. Proceedings in execution are in invitum as regards the judgment-debtor, and he is in no way called upon to notice them. It was not suggested that the defendants took any part in the execution-proceedings or stood by so as to induce bidders to suppose that they claimed no interest other than as representatives of the original judgment-debtor, or that their silence misled the bidders at the sale. As to the reception of the residue of the purchase-money after satisfaction of the judgment-debt, it took place after the sale was completed. GURUPADAPA v. IRAPA [I. L. R., 14 Bom., 558

200. ———— Evidence Act, s. 115—Auction-purchaser—Representation.—A, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, died on the 12th May 1867, leaving a widow B and a brother R, who was admittedly the next reversioner. In July 1867, B purpoted to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September 1867 obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of R9,000, and to secure its repayment executed as guardian of D a mortgage of seven mouzahs in favour of M. The money was advanced and the mortgage executed at the instigation of R and with his consent, and on his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A, and it was admitted that the money was advanced for, and specifically applied towards the payment of, decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August 1880, M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party defendant, as being a purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzahs included in his mortgage. On the 26th June 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzahs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree, M was opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had, on the 8th November 1880, purchased five out of the seven mouzahs at a sale in execution of certain decrees against R. On the 28th February 1884, L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th August 1884 M brought this suit against L, S, R, and D and the decree-holders in the suit against R for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S. It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity, and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahs. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage-money from the five mouzahs in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross-appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S, as the representative of R, was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus, having been a party to M's first suit, the question as to the liability of the mouzahs to satisfy the mortgage lien was res judicata as against him. Held that a purchaser at an execution-sale is not as such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act. Held further that, though R was estopped by his conduct from disputing the validity of the adoption or of M's rights as mortgagee, S, being an auction-purchaser, was not bound by R's acts, and was not estopped from disputing the adoption, as he derived his title by operation of law adversely to R, and was thus in a different position from a person claiming under a voluntary alienation. The first of the decrees in date was the plaintiffs' for money against the representatives of the deceased owner of the property, which before then had been mortgaged to the defendants by his widow. The plaintiffs obtained only the equity of redemption, their purchase having been of the right, title, and interest. The mortgagees, having got a decree upon their mortgage against the widow, purchased at the sale in execution and defended the possession which they obtained. Held that the defendants, in whose favour the decree had been made upon a bonâ fide mortgage, without notice that the mortgagor had been only holding benami for her husband, had the better title; that the High Court had rightly disallowed an objection taken by the plaintiffs that this defence, as distinguished from the defendants' answer that the widow was the real owner, had not been set up or decided in the Court of first instance; and held that the owner, having in his lifetime authorized his wife to hold herself out as proprietor in her own right, could not have succeeded in a suit to disentitle the mortgagees without proving that they either had taken the mortgage with such notice or that they had been put upon inquiry; that the same principle applied to these plaintiffs, who had purchased his right, title, and interest; and that they were bound equally with him. Ramcoomar Coondoo v. *Macqueen, L. 248. ——— Alienation of service vatan land by the holder of it—Impeachment of such alienation by the alienor—Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 5)—Vatandars.—The plaintiff, who was a vatandar kulkarni, sued to recover from the defendant possession of certain land with mesne profits, alleging that it was his service vatan land wrongfully taken possession of by the defendant in 1880. The defendant set up a mortgage of the land alleged to have been executed to the defendant by the plaintiff's mother in the plaintiff's name during his minority. Both the lower Courts found that the land was the plaintiff's kulkarni vatan land; that it had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's mother to the defendant for good consideration; and that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiff. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court,—Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the plaintiff was estopped from denying his title to mortgage the field. The general rule being that the grantor cannot dispute with his grantee his right to alienate the land to him, the circumstances of the case did not justify a departure from the rule. The plaintiff, although an hereditary public officer, was not a trustee for the purposes of the Vatan Act, and it could not be presumed that the grantee knew that the plaintiff's guardian had not obtained the previous sanction of Government to the mortgage. The plaintiff was, therefore, estopped from saying that the grant was forbidden by the Act. NARAYAN KHANDU KULKARNI v. KALGAUNDA BIRDAR PATEL

249. ——— Payment of a tax for one year without protest—Payment of the tax in a subsequent year under protest—Suit to recover money so paid—Cause of action.—The plaintiff paid a house tax at the rate of R6 for the year 1890 without any protest. When the tax was sought to be levied from the plaintiff at the same rate for the year 1891, he objected to the levy as illegal and excessive, and paid the tax under the protest. He then sued to recover what he alleged was an excess charge of R5 in respect of the tax for 1891. His claim was rejected on the ground that he was estopped from recovering the alleged excess by reason of his having paid the tax for 1890 without protest. Held that the suit was not barred. The levy of a tax in each year gives a new and distinct cause of action, and the payment of the tax without protest for one year does not bar a suit to recover a sum paid in a subsequent year under protest on account of a tax which was not legally chargeable for that year. The District Judge refused to accept these accounts as evidence of reputation, because no evidence was produced to show for what purpose, by whom, and in what circumstances, these accounts were prepared, and what guarantee existed to ensure their accuracy. Held that, inasmuch as they were from time to time prepared for administrative purposes by village officers and were produced from proper custody and otherwise sufficiently proved to be genuine, they were admissible as evidence of reputation. The proof was the arrival of the money at A & Co.'s places of business supported by entries in A & Co.'s books at each place, but there was no proof of payment to the agents save such entries. As to remittances to the other places, the only evidence was the books of A & Co. at the place of despatch. Held that there was no evidence as to the latter claims; and as to the former, although the evidence appeared insufficient, the case would not be remanded, as the appellant, independent of these claims, had a balance against them. In a suit to recover moneys unaccounted for, where defendants plead payments endorsed on documents, and the endorsements purport to have been signed by the plaintiffs, the formal and regular method of proof is to call on the plaintiffs to admit or deny their signatures, and then to call upon witnesses to state whether they saw the plaintiffs sign or could speak to the handwriting or generally what took place. 39. ———— Suit for balance of unadjusted account.—In a suit for a sum of money on an unadjusted account, plaintiff filed a memorandum (A) with her plaint, from which the amount claimed in the plaint could not be made out. In her examination by the Court the plaintiff put in another memorandum (C) to explain memorandum (A). Defendant admitted that memorandum (C) was signed by him. It had reference to a period immediately preceding that for which the suit was brought. Held that memorandum (C) was rather evidence to support the originally stated cause of action, than an amendment of the claim or the substitution of one claim or cause of action for another. The case was one which should have been decided not merely on the discrepancy between the two statements made by plaintiff, but on the whole of the evidence. The mere omission of an accountable party, framing his own account, to carry forward into a new account a balance against himself existing in a former one can constitute no evidence in his own favour. To prove the existence of the balance, such omission might be considered in conjunction with other evidence in the cause. MULKA MUKHDRA v. TEKAETH ROY [14 W. R., P. C., 24

It consisted of two parts, in one of which the joint properties of the plaintiff's vendor and the defendant were set out, and in the other the properties belonging to the defendant alone mentioned. In a suit by the plaintiff for some lands as being the joint property of his vendors and the defendant, the defendant put in the road-cess return in order to disprove plaintiff's allegation, by showing that the lands were included in the second part. The lower Court had relied on this return. It was contended in appeal that it was inadmissible under s. 95 of the Road Cess Act, being evidence in favour of the principal defendant. Held that the road-cess return was evidence against the plaintiff claiming through his vendor, and it is none the less evidence merely because, by admitting it as evidence against the plaintiff, it becomes evidence in favour of the defendant. (a) GENERALLY.

326. ———— Production of best evidence—Written documents—Evidence of authority of agent.—It is a cardinal rule of evidence, not one of technicality, but of substance, which it is dangerous to depart from, that where written documents exist they shall be produced as being the best evidence of their own contents. Special authority of an agent to sign an acknowledgment of debt under s. 20, Act IX of 1871, cannot be proved by secondary evidence of the contents of a letter, the non-production of which is not satisfactorily accounted for. sued to recover damages for the non-acceptance of wheat which the defendant on the 16th May 1889, by two contracts, agreed to purchase. At the hearing, in order to prove the terms of the contracts, the plaintiffs tendered two notes or memoranda of the contracts which purported to be signed by the broker and also by the defendant. These notes were in fact the sold notes which the broker had given to the plaintiffs. Each of those notes had been stamped with an anna stamp, but the stamp on one of them had not been cancelled at all, and the stamp on the other was without any mark of cancellation except a small part of the first letter of the defendant's signature, consisting of a slightly curved line. On these notes being tendered in evidence, it was objected that they were inadmissible, being unstamped, having regard to ss. 11 and 34 of the Stamp Act, I of 1879. The Court allowed the objection and rejected the notes. The plaintiffs then sought to prove the contracts by oral evidence, contending that the sold notes did not themselves constitute the contracts, but were only memoranda of parol contracts prepared by the broker for the information of the parties. Held that the terms of the contracts were reduced to writing, and no evidence, except the documents themselves, could be given in proof of them—s. 91 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872. In the subsequent suit B based his claim on the note in his account book. Held by the Court that the agreement by D to pay the balance found due from him to B on account stated between them in instalments of R200 annually could not be proved by the note made by B in his account book, but could only be proved by the promissory note. 365. ——— Destruction of deed, Proof of—Admission of registered copy.—In a suit on a bond, the defendant by his answer denied execution of the bond. The plaintiff in his reply stated the accidental destruction of the bond, and prayed leave to put in evidence a registered copy thereof, which the Court allowed, and at the same time ordered the fragments of the original to be produced. At the trial the plaintiff produced the fragments, and under s. 11, Madras Regulation XVII of 1802, put in as evidence a registered copy of the bond. He called no witnesses to prove that the fragments produced formed part of the original bond. The Court admitted the registered copy as evidence and found for the plaintiff. The Judicial Committee on appeal reversed this finding on the ground that the registered copy, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of the destruction of the original bond, was improperly admitted as secondary evidence. 366. ——— Proof of reason for its non-registration.—It is not enough for a party desirous of adducing secondary evidence of the contents of a document which ought to have been registered to show that he cannot produce it because it is not registered; he must show that its non-registration was not due to any fault or want of diligence on his part, or he must show that the party against whom he desires to use it was guilty of such fraud in the matter of non-registration that he cannot be allowed to object on that ground to the production of the secondary evidence. His conclusion should not be overruled, except in a clear case of miscarriage. In a suit alleging want of authority to adopt, the defence rested on the case that an anumati patro had been given by the defendant's deceased husband, but failed to show that there had been a sufficient search for, and to establish the loss of, the original document, so as to render secondary evidence of its contents admissible. officer the witnesses deposed to the absconder having been one of the participators in the crime charged against the prisoners then under trial. In the Sessions Court the Judge did not record that the sixth accused person had absconded, and the evidence was recorded against the prisoners then under trial only. In 1886 the absconder was apprehended and tried before the Court of Session upon the charge of murder. At that time most of the former witnesses were dead, and the Sessions Judge, referring to s. 33 of the Evidence Act, admitted in evidence against the prisoner the depositions given in 1874 before both the Magistrate and the Sessions Court. He also admitted the deposition of a surviving witness which had been given in 1874 before the Sessions Court. This witness now also gave evidence against the prisoner. Held that the depositions were not admissible in evidence under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, the prisoner not having been a party to the former proceedings and not having then had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. Held, however, that under the circumstances the depositions given in 1874 before the committing Magistrate, though not those given in the Court of Session, were admissible in evidence under s. 512 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Per STRAIGHT, J., that under the special circumstances the deposition taken in 1874 of the surviving witness was admissible under s. 157 of the Evidence Act as corroboration of her evidence given at the trial of the prisoner. S. 80 of the Evidence Act, therefore, does not warrant the presumption that the deposition of a medical witness taken by a committing Magistrate has been taken and attested in the accused's presence, so as to make such deposition admissible in evidence at the trial before the Court of Session under s. 509 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Queen-Empress v. *Riding, I. The deed provided that A and B should have a first charge upon the indigo to be manufactured in the season in respect of the moneys secured thereby; that the indigo should be sold, subject to A's and B's direction; that until the debt was paid, M should have no power to transfer, sell, or mortgage the properties thereby mortgaged, pledged, and assigned, or in any way to deal with the sale-proceeds of the manufactured indigo; and that A and B should have full power to arrange for the appointment and dismissal of the servants of the concern and for its better management. Previously to this, namely, in October 1872, M had, in pursuance of his letter of appointment, filed an estimate for the season's outlay largely exceeding the sum mentioned in the deed as the estimated outlay, and had alleged that, at the time of executing the mortgage-deed, he had informed one C, who was the general manager of A and B, and as such was the only medium of communication between M and A and B, that further advances would be necessary. According to M's account, C told him that A and B were unable to make further advances, and that he could, if they were needed, obtain them on the usual terms from the plaintiffs, who were indigo brokers. In previous years, during the lifetime of the husband of A and B, who had held similar mortgages of the concern and of the crop in those years to secure advances made by him, such advances had, with the mortgagee's knowledge, been supplemented by loans obtained from the plaintiffs on the security of a first charge upon the crop to the extent of such loans. And it was alleged by M that it was upon the understanding that the same course was to be followed in the present instance that the mortgage-deed to A and B was executed. In a suit against A, B, and M, to establish a first charge in respect of their advances to M upon 360 maunds of the indigo,—Held per GARTH, C.J., PHEAR and MACPHERSON, JJ., that the alleged oral agreement between C and M, as to obtaining loans, if necessary, from the plaintiffs and giving them a first charge on the season's indigo in respect of such loans, was in direct contravention and defeasance of the mortgage-deed to A and B, and was therefore inadmissible in evidence under s. 92 of the Evidence Act. Parol evidence was admitted to show that at the time the kabuliat was granted it had been agreed between the plaintiff and defendant (the title of the former being under dispute) that the whole rent payable under the kabuliat should be payable in respect of such of the villages as should actually come into defendant's possession. Held that such parol evidence was rightly admitted, there being no stipulation in the lease that the defendant should only pay rent on being put completely into possession, and that, although payment of rent is not ordinarily enforced, unless the lessor puts the lessee into possession, it was quite competent to the parties to waive such privilege. No mutation of names was effected in the revenue registers. The creditor brought a suit against the debtor to recover the principal and interest agreed to be paid under the bond, alleging that he had never received any rents under the jamog. Held that the jamog was not a subsequent oral agreement rescinding or modifying a contract which was registered according to the law for the time being in force within s. 92, prov. appears from such conduct that the apparent vendee treated the transaction as one of mortgage, the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage and nothing more It is a mistake to reject evidence of the conduct of parties to a written contract on the ground that it is only an indication of an unexpressed unwritten contract between them Conduct is no doubt, evidence of the agreement out of which it arose, but it may be very much more In many cases it may amount to an estoppel In such a case it is clear that evidence of conduct would be strictly admissible under s 115 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) And even when conduct falls short of a legal estoppel there is nothing in the evidence Act which prevents it from being proved or when proved from being taken into consideration Courts of Equity in England will always allow a party (whether plaintiff or defendant) to show that an assignment of an estate, which is on the face of it an absolute conveyance was intended to be nothing more than a security for debt, and they will not only look to the conduct of the parties, but will admit mere parol evidence to show or explain the real intention and purpose of the parties at the time The exercise of this remedial jurisdiction is justified on two grounds viz, part performance and fraud The Courts in India are not precluded by the Evidence Act from exercising a similar jurisdiction The rule of estoppel, as laid down in s 115, covers the whole ground covered by the theory of part performance That section does not say that, in order to constitute an estoppel, the acts which a person has been induced to do must have been acts prejudicial to his own interest Its terms are sufficiently wide to meet the case of a grantor who has simply been allowed to remain in possession on the understanding and belief be rested is the obligation which lies upon them to prevent fraud The Courts will not allow a rule or even a statute which was passed to suppress fraud, to be the most effectual encouragement to it, and accordingly in England the Courts, for the purpose of preventing fraud, have in some cases set aside the common law rules of evidence and the statute of frauds The Courts in India have the same justification in dealing similarly with the obstacles interposed by the Evidence Act In thus modifying the rules laid down by ss 91 and 92 of that Act the Courts will not be acting in opposition to the intention of the Legislature which by enacting the provisions of s 26, cl (c) of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) has shown an intention to relax the rules of the Evidence Act so as to bring them into conformity with the practice of the English Courts of Chancery. Quære—Whether prov. The plaintiff objected that the evidence of the agreement set up by the defendant was inadmissible. Held that, inasmuch as it was open to the plaintiff under prov. 1 of s. 92 of the Evidence Act to prove by oral evidence that the whole of the consideration-money had not been paid, it was equally competent to the defendant, in answer to such case, to adduce evidence to prove the true nature of the contract, and that the consideration was different from that stated in the contract. Held also that the plea of the defendant substantially was that, although the consideration was fixed at R2,000, there was a separate oral agreement to the effect that out of that sum the plaintiff was to refund R1,000 on account of the debt due from his relative, and that on this ground the oral evidence tendered was admissible under prov. 2 of s. 92 of the Act, the stipulation as to the refund of the R1,000 not being inconsistent with the recital as to the consideration in the contract. 100. ——— Evidence Act, 1872, s. 92—Evidence—Oral agreement inconsistent with written documents.—R, prior to his death, was a partner with defendants in the firm of N C & Co. He died on 8th November 1884. On the 9th November 1885, his executors passed a release to the defendants, which recited that R's share in the firm and future business had ceased on his death; that the surviving partners had requested the executors to settle the account of their testator with the firm, and that, after examining the books and taking accounts, etc., a balance of R8,395-11 was found due, on payment whereof the executors released the defendants from all claims in respect of the share and interest of R, etc. On the 7th April 1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff a one-anna share in the said firm, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought this suit for a declaration of his right to the share and for an account. He alleged that there had been no accurate examination of the books at the time of the release; that the amount really due to the testator's estate by the firm had not been ascertained; and that it had been agreed on by the partners at the time of the release that, in addition to the sum therein mentioned, the executors, as representing the testator's estate, should receive a one-anna share in the partnership. The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff, and contended that the interest of R and his estate in the partnership ceased at his death. They relied on the release, and denied any agreement to give the executors a share, and contended that, under s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), no evidence could be given of the alleged agreement. For the plaintiff it was contended that the agreement as to the one-anna share was quite independent of the release. Held that evidence of the agreement that the executors should continue to have a one-anna share in the partnership was inadmissible, as being inconsistent with the written release (Evidence Act, s. 92). By the release the executors of R released the partners from all claims whatever in respect of R's share, and the consideration for that release was stated in the document to be a lump sum, on payment of which, under the writing, all claims arising out of the old partnership ceased and determined. The oral agreement added another term to the consideration for release in respect of the past accounts, viz., the continuance of a one-anna share in the partnership. Such an agreement was not a purely collateral or additional agreement. It was an addition to the terms of a contract that had been reduced to writing, and was inconsistent with those terms. The words do not preclude one of two persons in whose favour a deed of sale purported to be executed from proving by oral evidence in a suit by the one against the other that the defendant was not a real, but a nominal, party only to the purchase, and that the plaintiff was solely entitled to the property to which it related. M conveyed certain houses and premises to plaintiff and defendant jointly by a sale-deed. alleged, originated in consequence of the above association having agreed that all piece goods ordered out by its members should be conveyed to Bombay by certain lines of steamers only, and by no others It was stated that, unless some such custom existed,

(3)—Declaration of party against proprietary interest—Presumption of party being dead.—In 1847, A, a Hindu widow, executed in favour of B a varaspatra (a deed of heirship) in the following terms:—"My husband has died. We have no issue, and you are a son of my husband's cousin. Taking this into consideration, my husband expressed his wish, when he was on the point of death, that all the houses and shops situate in Poona, except the house at Benares, should be given to you, and that you should be made owner of all money-dealings connected with Poona. I therefore, in obeying his command, pass this deed of heirship to you, and make you owner of all the property mentioned above like our son. You therefore enjoy the property in your name joyfully." Under this varaspatra, B took possession of the property mentioned therein, and enjoyed it during his lifetime. After his death, his gomasta (agent) managed it for and on behalf of B's minor son C. In 1881, C filed a suit to redeem a house and a garden, part of the property covered by the varaspatra, and which had been mortgaged by A's husband in 1831. One of the defences to this suit was that neither C nor his father was the heir of the original mortgagor, and that therefore C could not redeem the property in dispute. At the trial C produced the varaspatra of 1847 in support of his title, alleging that he had found it among the papers of the old gomasta of his father, who used to look after his affairs during his minority. Held that the varaspatra was admissible under s. 32, cl. 3, of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), as it was manifestly a declaration by A against her proprietary interest; for by it she divested herself of her widow's estate in the property, and there being no evidence of her existence after 1847, she must be presumed to have been dead in 1881, when the suit was filed. 12. ——————— Deposition of absent witness.—When the evidence of an absent witness is admitted under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, 1872, the ground for its admission should be stated fully and clearly to enable the High Court to judge of the propriety of its admission. In the present case the High Court considered that the evidence of an absent witness had been improperly admitted because there was nothing to show that by ordinary care and the use of ordinary means the witness could not have been produced. The grounds upon which the Sessions Judge admitted the evidence taken during the enquiry were that the attendance of the witnesses could not be procured without an expense of R500, an amount which he considered unreasonable, that the witnesses would be inconvenienced, and that their evidence did not concern the accused personally, having reference only to the identification of the property in respect of which the accused was charged. Held that the Sessions Judge had improperly admitted such evidence. The document was filed as an exhibit in the suit, but the Subordinate Judge held that it was not admissible in evidence. It bore an endorsement purporting to be signed by the Assistant Registrar-General for Ceylon, to the effect that it was a true copy of a last will and testament made from the Protocol of record filed in his office. No evidence was tendered before the Subordinate Judge that the copy had been made from, and compared with, the original. On the question of the admissibility in evidence of the said document,—Held that it was inadmissible; that it was not a public document within the meaning of s. 74 (1) (iii) or (2) of the Evidence Act, and that, in the absence of evidence that it had been made from and compared with the original, the provisions of that Act relating to secondary evidence of public documents were inapplicable. 11. ———— Ancient documents, Rule as to.—The English rule that a document more than 30 years old, if free from suspicion of dishonesty, may be admitted as evidence without proof of the execution or writing, was held to be founded on a reason which had less weight in this country, where less credit should be given to ancient documents which are unsupported by any evidence that might free them from a suspicion of being false or fabricated. Even in England such evidence unsupported was held to be of very little weight. Accordingly it was not allowed to prevail here in a case in which there was other evidence inconsistent with the title which those documents professed to create. PHOOL BIBEE v. GOUR SURUN DOSS. The defendants resisted the claim, relying, inter alia, on a mokurari pottah executed on 9th October 1832. This pottah purported to bear the seal of one of the then maliks of the lands, and also purported to be signed on behalf of all the maliks by A. Held that, although the pottah might be an authentic document, it would not bind the maliks who did not affix their seals, nor those who claimed under them, unless it was shown that A had a special authority to sign the names of such maliks to it or a general authority to sign on their behalf documents of the same description as the pottah; and that, until such proof was given, the document was not admissible in evidence. Held, further, the fact that the pottah was more than 30 years old gave rise to the presumption that the signature at the foot of it was in the handwriting of A, and that the pottah was executed by him; but that to make it evidence against the representatives of the maliks who had not executed it, the defendants should show that A had authority to sign their names. Protection is afforded only to answers which a witness has objected to give or which he has asked to be excused from giving, and which then he has been compelled by the Court to give. Queen v. Gopal Dass, I.L.R., 3 Mad., 721, followed. Per BIRDWOOD, J. (dissenting)—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), read with s. 14 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), compels a witness to answer criminating questions, and he is protected by the proviso to s. 132 from a criminal prosecution for any offence of which he criminates himself directly or indirectly by his answer, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer. It is not only when a witness asks to be excused from answering a criminating question and his request is refused that he is "compelled to give" the answer within the meaning of the proviso. Protection is afforded only to answers which a witness has objected to give or which he has asked to be excused from giving, and which then he has been compelled by the Court to give. Queen v. Gopal Dass, I.L.R., 3 Mad., 721, followed. Per BIRDWOOD, J. (dissenting)—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), read with s. 14 of the Indian Oaths Act. It is not only when a witness asks to be excused from answering a criminating question and his request is refused that he is "compelled to give" the answer within the meaning of the proviso. Under s. 216 of the former Code (Act VIII of 1859), a notice was issued on the same day to the defendants, calling upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The defendants accordingly appeared on the day fixed, at which date the new Code had come into force, and contended that under s. 266, cl. (g), of the new Code, the pension was no longer attachable. Held that all proceedings commenced and pending when Act X of 1877 became law were, under the General Clauses Act (Act I of 1868), s. 6, to be governed by the Code theretofore in force, the general rule of construction contained in that section not being affected or varied by ss. 1 and 3 of Act X of 1877; and that a bonâ fide application for enforcement of a decree in a particular way, coupled with an order of the Court in furtherance of that object, as much constitutes a proceeding in execution commenced and pending as the actual issue of a warrant of attachment. Subsequently to the passing of Act VII of 1888, the decree-holder made a fresh application for such execution under s. 46 of that Act. The Court, after referring to s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, rejected the application on the ground that proceedings against the surety had been commenced before Act VII of 1888 had come into force. Held on appeal that the application should have been allowed. The property was sold on the 5th August 1889, but the Collector refused to confirm the sale, as the sanction of the Governor in Council under cl. 2, s. 31 of the Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), which came into force on the 25th March 1889, had not been obtained. Held that the section was not retrospective in its operation, and that the sale should be confirmed, although no sanction had been obtained. When the Act passed, the plaintiff had already acquired a vested right by the decree to have the property sold, and the presumption was that the Legislature did not intend to interfere with that vested right. The judgment-debtor now applied under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 310A, that the sale be set aside. Held that the provisions of Act V of 1894, whereby the abovementioned section was added to the Civil Procedure Code, were applicable to the case. On the 22nd August 1889 (i.e., subsequent to the Act coming into force), a decree was passed for sale of the mortgaged property. The decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who refused to put up the property to sale without the previous sanction of Government, as required by s. 31 of the Talukhdari Act. Held that s. 31 of the Act had no application to the present case. The san-mortgage having been executed before the Act came into force, and left with its validity untouched by cl. (1) of s. 31, the ordinary remedy of the mortgagee to bring the property to sale was not taken away by that section. The sanction of the Governor in Council was therefore not necessary to the sale in execution of the decree on the mortgage. NAGAR PRAGJI v. JIVABHAI BAVAJI . . . . I. L. R., 19 Bom., 80

The decree was for a total amount of R1,282. Subsequently, on application by the decree-holder and without giving notice to the judgment-debtor, the Court which passed the decree, purporting to act under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, altered the decree and made it for a sum of R1,460. The decree-holder took out execution, and the judgment-debtor objected that the decree was for R1,282 and had been improperly altered. The Court executing the decree disallowed the objection on the ground that it was not such as could be entertained in the execution department. Held that, when a decree-holder executes his decree, a judgment-debtor is competent to object that the decree is not the decree of the Court fit to be executed, and therefore not capable of execution; and that the judgment-debtor in this case could raise the question whether the decree, which was altered behind his back, was a valid decree and fit to be executed. In default of payment within the prescribed time, they were to stand forever foreclosed. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court. On the 10th September 1888, the High Court passed an order allowing the defendant to withdraw the appeal. On the 17th December 1888, plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree of the 12th November 1886. The lower Court, regarding the withdrawal of the second appeal as practically a confirmation of the decree of the 12th November 1886, computed the six months allowed for redemption from the date of the order of withdrawal (10th September 1888) and granted the plaintiffs' application. On appeal to the High Court, —Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the application was time-barred, and that the plaintiff was foreclosed. The time allowed for redemption was to be computed, not from the date of the High Court's order permitting the withdrawal of the appeal, but from the date of the decree applied from (i.e., 12th November 1886). The order of withdrawal was not a decree. The only decree which could be executed was that of the 12th November 1886. The redemption money not having been paid within six months from that date, the plaintiffs were foreclosed. The Court could not in execution-proceedings enlarge the time fixed for redemption. Ishwargar v. *Chudasama Manabhai, I. L. The words "suit" and "appeal" in s. 647 apply to suits and appeals in the strict sense of those terms, and were not intended to cover proceedings for the enforcement of rights decreed in a suit or appeal. An application for execution of decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor was ordered by the Court to be struck off upon the statement of the decree-holder's pleader that the judgment-debtor was in hiding, and that the decree-holder did not desire to prosecute the application further. At that time an order for a warrant of arrest had been issued subject to the payment of fees, but those fees had not been paid, nor had the diet-money been deposited, and no steps were taken to proceed with the application. No permission was given to the decree-holder to withdraw the application with leave to take fresh proceedings. Held by the Full Bench that a subsequent application for execution of the decree was barred by s. 373 read with s. 647 of the Civil Procedure Code. Sarju Prasad v. *Sita Ram, I. S.647 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot, on its true construction, be applied to execution of decree, and was inapplicable to petitions for execution before, and independently of the passing of Act VI of 1892, ss. 4 and 5. A first application for execution of a decree having been, on the decree-holder's petition, struck off the list of cases pending for hearing, a second application was made within the period of limitation. Held that the first application, notwithstanding that the order striking it off had been made, was not annulled, but afforded a fresh starting point for limitation. Held also that, although the petition for execution had been withdrawn without leave to apply again having been expressly granted by the Court, the petitioner's right to renew his petition within due time remained. The provisions of s. 373, which could only have applied through the effect of s. 647, had not been rendered applicable thereby to petitions for execution. The plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of certain timber or damages for its removal, and got a decree. The defendant appealed, and was ultimately successful in getting the plaintiff's suit dismissed, but meanwhile the timber had been taken in execution of the decree and sold. The defendant applied to the original Subordinate Judge's Court in execution of the High Court decree for restitution of the timber or R13,325 damages. The plaintiff objected that the defendant must bring a suit, and could not make this claim in execution. The Subordinate Judge overruled this objection, but held that he was limited to a grant of R5,000, the pecuniary limit to his original jurisdiction, and awarded the defendant that sum for his timber. Held the matter was rightly dealt with in execution, and that the jurisdiction of the original Court in execution was neither ousted by the fact that the value of the property in dispute exceeded the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction, nor was such Court limited in its award to the sum of R5,000. 78. ———— Decree for redemption within a specified time—Appeal against decree—Power of Court in execution to extend time for redemption allowed by decree—Ground for enlarging time.—The plaintiffs sued for the redemption of certain mortgaged property. On the 1st March 1886, a decree was passed declaring the plaintiffs entitled to redeem on payment by them to the defendants of R649-11-0 within three months from the date of the decree. Against this decree the defendants (the mortgagees) appealed on the ground that a much larger sum than R649-11-0 was due to them on the mortgage. The plaintiffs also filed objections to this decree under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been long ago paid off, and that now a large sum was due to them from the mortgagees who had been in receipt of the profits of the property. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs did not pay the R649-11-0 within three months as ordered by the decree. On the 12th October 1886, they presented an application for execution, and paid into Court the R649-11-0. The lower Court granted their application, and ordered possession of the property to be given to them. The defendants appealed to the High Court. Held, reversing the order of the Court below, that the Court in executing the decree had no power to alter the language of the decree, which it would virtually do if it enlarged the time mentioned in it by accepting the R649-11-0 paid into Court by the plaintiffs on the 12th October 1886. Held also that, even if the Court had power to enlarge the time in the course of execution, the mere fact that the plaintiff had lodged an appeal would afford no special ground for enlarging the time. The sale was confirmed and the purchaser was put into possession. On appeal against the order confirming the sale, the High Court held that the sale had been vitiated by certain irregularities and set it aside. The purchaser preferred an appeal to the Privy Council against the judgment of the High Court. While the appeal was pending, he was compelled to deliver up possession of the land, but security was furnished under an order of the Court by persons not being parties to the suit for its re-delivery to him and for the payment of mesne profits in the event of his appeal being successful. Meanwhile the land in question was placed in charge of a receiver on the motion of other persons holding decrees against the judgment-debtors. On appeal the Privy Council reversed the order of the High Court. The purchaser was accordingly replaced in possession of the land, and he applied for execution in respect of the mesne profits against the respondents in the Privy Council and the sureties. The Court of first instance dismissed the application as against the sureties, and limited the applicant's claim against the others to the net income of the land, less the cost of management by the receiver, and allowed him no interest. Held (1), although the appeals to the High Court and the Privy Council related to the order confirming the sale, and not to that by which possession was awarded, and the order in Council did not direct payment of mesne profits, yet such payment was within its purview as being a benefit by way of restitution fairly and reasonably consequential upon it—Rodger v. *Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, L. After the decree had been altered, application was made to execute it as altered, but this was opposed by the judgment-debtor on the ground that that was not the decree which could be executed. Held by the Full Bench that the objection must prevail on the grounds that the decree sought to be executed was not that of the Appellate Court, and that the decree had been altered by the first Court, which had no power to alter it. Abdul Hayai Khan v. *Chunia Kuar, I. On 23rd July 1888, plaintiff obtained a decree for the redemption of certain lands on payment within three months of the amount due to the mortgagee, which was to be ascertained in execution proceedings. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff presented a darkhast for execution on the 4th October 1888. This darkhast was dismissed, as the plaintiff failed to produce a copy of the mortgage bond within the time allowed by the Court. The three months allowed by the decree for payment expired on the 23rd October 1888. On 11th February 1890, the High Court confirmed the decree, and on 11th April 1890 plaintiff presented a fresh darkhast for execution. Both the lower Courts dismissed this darkhast on the ground that the dismissal of the first darkhast operated as *res judicata. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree after the expiration of three years from the date of the original decree, but within three years from the date of the appellate decree. When the case came on for hearing, the advocate for the plaintiffs consented that the other cases should follow the finding of the Court in the first case, but the advocate for the defendant refused assent. Judgment was given in favour of the plaintiffs, and was also entered up in all the remaining cases. Defendant appealed from these decisions to the High Court, which reversed the Recorder's decision in the first case, and subsequently, without hearing argument, reversed the decisions in such (seven) of the eleven as were appealable. Held that the decrees passed by the Recorder's Court in the four unappealed suits were good decrees, on which execution could be issued in the usual form, provided they were not altered on review. In default of payment by the defendants, the plaintiffs were to take possession of the land. The plaintiffs were to give the defendants credit for any sums which they had paid as rent since the year 1882-83. Both parties appealed to the High Court from this decree. While these appeals were still pending, the plaintiffs, on the 13th February 1890, applied for execution of the decree. They prayed for immediate possession and for R334 alleged to be the rent due under the decree, viz., R34 for 1882-83, and R50 for each of the six years from 1883-84 to 1888-89 inclusive. The application was granted by the Subordinate Judge, and the plaintiffs obtained possession on the 19th February 1890. On the 20th March 1890, the defendants applied to be restored to possession, stating that they had appealed to the High Court against the decree of the District Court, which had fixed their rent at the enhanced rate of R50, and that their appeal was still pending; that the sum of R334 was not due to the plaintiffs, inasmuch as they (the defendants) had continued to pay the rent at the old rate (viz., R34) to the village officers together with the local fund cess R2-2-0, being a total of R36-2-0 for each of the six years. They contended that the plaintiffs were thus entitled only to R83-4-0, and not R334, and they claimed to get back the land on the ground that the plaintiffs had obtained possession on an illegal application. While this application of the 20th March 1890 was still pending, the appeals against the District Court's decree of the 13th February 1889 came on for hearing before the High Court, which confirmed that decree on the 17th July 1890. Thereupon the defendants, on the 1st August 1890, brought into Court R98 (being the difference between the old rent which they had paid and the enhanced rent payable under the confirmed decree), and applied to be restored to possession. On the 6th February 1891, the defendants' application of the 20th March 1890 came on for hearing, and was rejected by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the defendants had not obeyed the District Court's decree. The defendants thereupon appealed to the District Court, which reversed that decision, and ordered that possession should be given to the defendants on the ground that the time for payment of the amount due under the decree should be reckoned from the date of the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, viz., 17th July 1890, and that by their payments made to the village officers and their payment into Court on the 1st August 1890 the defendants had obeyed the decree, and were entitled to be put back into possession. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. Held (reversing the order of the District Court and restoring that of the Subordinate Judge) that the defendants could not recover possession. The fact that they had appealed to the High Court could not prevent the decree of the District Court from being executed, or enlarge the time for payment of the rent as decreed by that Court. No stay of execution was asked for, and all that the Subordinate Judge had to see in February 1890 was whether payment of rent had been made in accordance with the terms of the decree of the District Court made on the 13th February 1889. The defendants had not paid that rent when the plaintiffs executed the decree on the 19th February 1890. The decree was legally executed before the High Court's decree was passed on the 17th July 1890, and that execution could not be afterwards cancelled, because of the High Court's decree. When the decree of the District Court was passed, the defendants should at once have paid to

The plaintiff denied that the defendant was an agriculturist. The Subordinate Judge raised an issue as to whether the defendant was an agriculturist, and, having after enquiry found the issue in the affirmative, was of opinion that the decree should be considered a nullity and should not be executed, inasmuch as, the defendant being an agriculturist, the Court of Small Causes had no jurisdiction to pass it. On reference to the High Court,—Held that the Subordinate Judge was not competent to question the validity of the Small Cause Court decree, his duty being confined to enforcing it, on the "presentation of a copy of it and certificate," as provided by s. 20 of Act XI of 1865. 237. ———— Former mode of execution in High Court—Practice of High Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 250.—The practice of the High Court under the Civil Procedure Code, on the execution of decrees for money, either against immoveable or moveable estate, has been, in the first instance, to issue a writ of attachment, and subsequently, on its return by the Sheriff duly executed, to issue a writ directing a sale. The writ of fi. fa. which issued from the Supreme Court was an authority to the Sheriff not only to seize, but also to sell. S. 250 of the Civil Procedure Code applied neither to executions against immoveable property nor to executions against debts due to the defendant; and in order to give to third parties full opportunity of vindicating their right before sale and also to give the defendant an opportunity of paying, it has not been usual to issue process of attachment and sale simultaneously even against personal property, and it would not seem to be proper to do so, except under special circumstances. On reference to the High Court,—Held that, although the decree was absolute in its terms and contained no express limitation of R's liability, nevertheless the law being clear that she could only be liable to the extent of her stridhan, it was to be assumed that the direction to pay, contained in the decree, had reference to that fund only. Judgment was entered up, and a decree obtained thereon soon after the bond was executed. In accordance with a covenant in the mortgage-deed, the mortgagees entered into possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the estate, which they were authorized to receive for five years from the date of the mortgage. They remained in possession for six years, and then, more than one year having elapsed since any proceedings in execution had been taken, they applied for execution of their decree against the mortgaged property. The property was out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Held that, if the application were granted, the execution of the decree must be limited to property other than that which was the subject of the mortgage. There being evidence to shew that the parties had entered into an agreement for a fresh mortgage of the property for twenty-two years, the application for execution was refused. 292. ——— Decree establishing a mortgage and directing sale—Attachment.—In order to enforce a decree which establishes a mortgage and directs a sale of the mortgaged premises in satisfaction of the mortgage, it is not necessary to issue an attachment. If the decree contains, as it ought to contain, a direction for sale of the mortgaged premises, the proceeding under such a decree by attachment is unnecessary as well as expensive and dilatory. The direction for sale in the decree is in itself sufficient authority for the sale. That direction is founded on the specific lien or charge on the mortgaged premises created by the contract of mortgage, and not on the execution clauses in the Codes of Civil Procedure. The property was subject to a mortgage at the time it was sold. Subsequently a decree was obtained against P enforcing this mortgage, of which K became the holder. K sought to have this decree executed, not against the mortgaged property, but against other property belonging to P. Held that, if K purchased the property knowing that it was mortgaged, or if in consequence of the mortgage he purchased it for a less sum than it would otherwise have fetched, it would be inequitable to allow him to obtain satisfaction of the decree out of the other property of P. The minor died, and in 1897 his widow, Sundri, as his heir, applied for execution of the decree, claiming seventy maunds of paddy, being the amount due at the rate specified in the decree. Held that in execution of the decree she was only entitled to recover the arrears of the allowance up to the date of her husband's death. (n) MORTGAGE.

291. ———— Decree on mortgage—Collateral security—Money-decree on bond.—The defendants mortgaged certain property in the mofussil to the plaintiffs in April 1866, and at the same time, as a collateral security to the mortgage, executed a bond in favour of the plaintiffs and a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment on the bond. Judgment was entered up, and a decree obtained thereon soon after the bond was executed. In accordance with a covenant in the mortgage-deed, the mortgagees entered into possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the estate, which they were authorized to receive for five years from the date of the mortgage. They remained in possession for six years, and then, more than one year having elapsed since any proceedings in execution had been taken, they applied for execution of their decree against the mortgaged property. The property was out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Held that, if the application were granted, the execution of the decree must be limited to property other than that which was the subject of the mortgage. There being evidence to show that the parties had entered into an agreement for a fresh mortgage of the property for twenty-two years, the application for execution was refused. If the decree contains, as it ought to contain, a direction for sale of the mortgaged premises, the proceeding under such a decree by attachment is unnecessary as well as expensive and dilatory. The direction for sale in the decree is in itself sufficient authority for the sale. That direction is founded on the specific lien or charge on the mortgaged premises created by the contract of mortgage, and not on the execution clauses in the Codes of Civil Procedure. Subsequently a decree was obtained against P enforcing this mortgage, of which K became the holder. K sought to have this decree executed, not against the mortgaged property, but against other property belonging to P. Held that, if K purchased the property knowing that it was mortgaged, or if in consequence of the mortgage he purchased it for a less sum than it would otherwise have fetched, it would be inequitable to allow him to obtain satisfaction of the decree out of the other property of P. The Subordinate Judge refused the application on the ground that there was no such provision in the order for sale under s. 88. Held that the decree-holder was entitled to the decree asked for. That Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court. In obedience to the decree, the judgment-debtor deposited in Court certain property in his possession consisting of bonds, decrees, and other articles. But as he did not produce the whole of the property as ordered by the decree, the Court directed execution to proceed against his surety. The surety paid into Court the full sum stipulated in the surety-bond. Thereupon the judgment-debtor applied that the property deposited by him in Court should be valued and made over to the decree-holder in part satisfaction of the decree pro tanto, and that only the balance then remaining due should be paid out of the money paid in by the surety. The Court refused, holding that the decree-holder was entitled to be paid over the whole sum paid in by the surety. On appeal, held (reversing the order of the lower Court) that the property already produced in Court by the judgment-debtor should be first applied towards the satisfaction of the partition-decree, and if the decree-holder did not obtain complete satisfaction in this way, the money paid in by the surety should then be made available. The Court directed an order to issue to the nazir to remove the judgment-debtor's wall from the top of the decree-holder's wall. Held that the decree-holder's application could not be granted in that form, and that he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given in the way provided for by s. 260 of Act X of 1877, by the imprisonment of the judgment-debtor, or the attachment of his property, or both. Held also that the Court was wrong in passing the order it had; but that it should have pointed out to the decree-holder the manner in which he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given and the remedy to which he was entitled; and that, upon such amended application being made, the proper course to pursue was to serve a notice on the judgment-debtor, directing him to comply with the order contained in the decree within a time to be fixed by such notice; and that, if he fail to comply with such order within the time so limited, the Court might then, at the instance of the decree-holder, make an order either for the judgment-debtor's imprisonment or for the attachment of his property, due regard being had to the provisions of s. 260 in the latter case. Held further that the High Court in special appeal should not vary the order for execution which had been passed in such a way as to give the decree-holder that relief for which he did not ask. A person who was not on the record when the decree was made does not constitute himself a party to the suit by applying for execution, and a question as to his legitimacy is consequently not one which the Court executing the decree is competent to entertain. Ss. 102 and 103 of Act VIII of 1859 relate only to proceedings prior to decree, and not to proceedings in execution. S. 208 of the same Act does not apply where the person seeking to execute is not a transferee from the original decree-holder, either by assignment or operation of law. The section does not apply to cases where the right to an equitable interest in a decree is seriously contested, and was not intended to enable a Court to try, on an application for execution, such an important question as the legitimacy of an heir. Since proceedings under s. 208, Act VIII of 1859, were, by s. 364 of the Act, not liable to appeal, a suit would probably lie to reverse an order passed therein. There is no express provision for it in the sections relating to execution. Ss. 361 to 372 relate to changes during suit, and speak only of plaintiffs and defendants—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor. A Court of appeal having confirmed the decree of a second class Subordinate Judge, the decree was transferred for execution to the first class Subordinate Judge. After the transfer, the judgment-debtor died. The judgment-creditor then applied to the first class Subordinate Judge to substitute on the record the name of the representative of the deceased. The first class Subordinate Judge rejected the application and referred the judgment-creditor to the second class Subordinate Judge, who also rejected the application on the ground that the decree which was being executed was the appellate decree in which his decree was merged, and therefore he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. Held that the course open to the judgment-creditor was by way of application to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased as provided by s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), in which case the application to execute the decree, having regard to s. 583, would be to the second class Subordinate Judge, although by s. 248 the notice to the party against whom execution was applied for would be issued by the first class Subordinate Judge to whom the decree was transferred for execution. Pending the proceedings, one of the judgment-debtors died. On an application to that Court by the judgment-creditor to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, a notice was issued under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The legal representative objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, and that the application should have been made under s. 234 of the Code to the Court that passed the decree. Held that the power of the Court executing a decree to order execution under s. 249 against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, after the issue of notice under s. 248, is not cut down by the provisions of s. 234, which simply empowers the decree-holder to apply to the Court which passed the decree to execute it against the legal representative of a judgment-debtor who is dead, and that the Court to which the decree has been transferred has full jurisdiction to allow execution to proceed against the legal representative. Held also that, even assuming that an application under s. 234 to the Court which passed the decree was a necessary

Execution of the decree was sought against his legal representative, into whose hands it was found that certain of the assets of the deceased judgment-debtor had come; but before anything was recovered, the legal representative in turn died. Held that the decree-holder was entitled to execute his decree against the legal representative of the legal representative to the extent of any assets of the original judgment-debtor which might have come into her possession. 405. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 234.—Under s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code, the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor is liable summarily only in respect of property actually received by him, or taken into his disposition. On the 27th March 1878, one B obtained a decree for R2,100 against one P, who died in July of that year, leaving his son H his legal representative. Subsequently, one Homjibhai sued H as the legal representative of P upon a mortgage executed by the latter in his lifetime, and obtained a decree, in execution of which he sold the mortgaged property by auction, and bought it in himself for R810. On appeal, this decree was reversed on the 3rd August 1883. Instead of thereupon recovering the property which had been sold in execution, H, on the 16th November 1883, agreed with Homjibhai that the latter should retain it on payment of R240 as costs of the suit. Shortly before this compromise was effected, B sold her decree to the appellant, K, who in 1884 applied for execution against H. The Subordinate Judge made an order for execution against H personally to the extent of R810, holding that H had fraudulently adjusted the decree in Homjibhai's suit, and that, even if there was no fraud, he, as administrator of P's estate, ought to have recovered back the money realized by the sale, instead of accepting a compromise. On appeal, the order of the Subordinate Judge was reversed by the District Judge. On appeal to the High Court,—Held, confirming the order of the District Judge that H was not personally liable. Under s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), a representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, who has failed purposely or negligently to recover some debt due to the estate of the deceased, or some property belonging to it, is not liable in the same way as for property of the deceased which has come to his hands. In that section, property is not defined as identical with assets, and so to include mere rights of action. Nor is it provided that in an execution-proceeding the representative shall be made answerable as well for what with diligence on his part would have come to his hands as what actually has come to his hands. It may well be that, while the Legislature intended to bring the representative under the control of a summary inquiry where he had actually received property, it did not intend to make him answerable in other cases except through the medium of a suit for administration or other regular action. Afterwards F D got a decree, whereby both the will and the adoption were set aside, and he was declared the legal heir of J D. K M then sought to enforce his decree against F D by the sale of the property which now formed part of the estate of F D, who objected to the proceedings. Held that, as F D was not the legal representative of the judgment-debtors, the decree could not bind the estate in his hands; but, in order to make the estate liable for the debt, the proper course of the decree-holder was to bring a regular suit against F D. The rice, while in the custody of a bailiff of the Court nazir in the place where it had been attached, was clandestinely threshed and carried off by thieves, who left the straw. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of the unthreshed rice from the defendants, both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the theft was not the immediate or probable result of the attachment, and that the conduct of the defendants had not in any way conduced to the loss of the rice. Held by the High Court, reversing the decrees of the lower Courts, that the defendants were liable. When the wrongful seizure was made at the instance of the defendants, the plaintiff's cause of action was complete, and was independent of the subsequent occurrence. No such power exists under the Code. On the 29th July 1886, an application was made by a party against whom the High Court, on second appeal, had passed a decree, dated the 18th March 1886, for review of judgment. On the 28th August, the applicant made a further application that execution of the decree might be stayed pending the determination of the application for review, and an order was passed ex-parte granting this application. Subsequently, the opposite party applied under s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code for a review of the ex-parte order on the grounds (i) that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it; and (ii) that the application of the 29th July was beyond time, and therefore there could be no review of judgment, and no order for stay of execution pending such review. Held that the decree of 18th March being final and unappealable, and no application for review of judgment having been granted within the meaning of s. 630 of the Code, the application for stay of execution did not fall within s. 545 or s. 546, nor did s. 647 apply to it, nor any other provision of the Code. From this judgment an appeal was preferred under s. 15 to a Full Bench. After the opinion of the Division Bench was pronounced, A applied to the Judge for the return of his security-bond; but his application was refused pending the final decree of the High Court in the matter. He then moved the High Court for the cancellation or return of the bond. Held that, as the High Court had authority under s. 338, Act VIII of 1859, to make an order calling for security, it had authority at any time to modify or cancel such order, or to direct the restoration of the security when no longer required, and that in carrying out the Court's order to take security and enquire into its validity, the Judge was acting, not judicially, but ministerially. Held also that, as the decree of the Judge had been reversed by the Bench who tried the appeal, there was no decree of the Judge to execute, and the Judge's order refusing to return the security-fond was passed without jurisdiction, and was therebore null and void. On the reversal of the decree, the liability of the surety ceased, and the security-bond became a dead letter. AMEER ALI v. KASSIM ALI KHAN . . . . . 13 W. R., 403

The bond would not bind the decree-holder to conform to a mere direction as to the manner in which the decree was to be executed when that direction came too late, but would need to be construed equitably, and the other party, if still a debtor to the decree-holder, would not be entitled to recover anything unless it were shown that he had sustained damage. 508. ———— Order of sale—Application for execution struck off—Application for restoration—Finality of order.—A decree for money was passed on the 19th March 1865. The first application for its execution, made after Act X of 1877 came into force, was dated the 16th December 1878. On this application an order was made by the Court executing the decree (Munsif) for the sale of certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The latter objected to the execution of the decree on the ground of limitation, and the decree-holders filed an answer to the objection. On the 14th July 1879, the case was struck off, because the decree-holder had not deposited certain process-fees, without the disposal of the objection. On the 1st October 1879, the decree-holders again applied for the sale of the property, and it was ordered to be sold. On the 17th February, the judgment-debtor presented a petition repeating the objection, which, on the 13th March 1880, the Munsif entertained and disallowed. This order was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge, and again by the High Court. Meanwhile, the Munsif had struck off the case from the file of execution cases pending in his Court on the ground that the records had been despatched to the Appellate Court. On the 18th September 1882, the decree-holder again applied for execution of the decree, praying that "the suit might be restored to its number, and that the judgment-debt might be caused to be realized by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property specified in the former schedule." Held that the decree-holder was entitled to execution of the decree, and that he could get it under the application which was made on the 1st October 1879, inasmuch as the matter was made res judicata by the decree of the High Court in appeal, and it must be taken that that decree was correctly passed, and that the order for sale passed upon it was properly made, and that the sale ought to have taken place. Held also that the proper application for the decree-holder to have made in September 1882 was that the case might be restored to the Munsif, and that the present application might be so dealt with as to effect the same result, because the prayer contained therein referred to the number of the proceedings of October 1879 and to the schedule of the property then ordered to be sold. In 1828 B, who claimed a portion of the share taken by S C, on partition with mesne profits, filed a bill in the Supreme Court against S C and others as representatives of D, and obtained a decree for R2,00,000. Pending this litigation, S C died, leaving six sons, J, M, H, P, C, and S M, and a will made before the birth of S M, by which he left all his property to his sons other than S M. On the death of S C, J, as one of the executors of his will, compromised B's suit, so far as it related to the estate of S C, for R80,000, and afterwards, in the same capacity, sued the representatives of S to recover that amount and the costs in the suit brought by B, and obtained a decree for R1,70,000. In the meantime H died, leaving the plaintiffs, his sons and heirs, and his brothers J and M, his executors. J renounced the executorship. M, on the 3rd June 1854, as executor of H executed a deed of assignment, by which he conveyed to J and S M, for R5,000, the interest of the plaintiffs in the decree obtained by J, and subsequently, at a sale of property belonging to the representatives of S in execution of the decree, J himself became the purchaser. In 1857, in an administration suit which had been brought by the plaintiffs to compel M to account for the assets received by him from the estate of H, the master was directed to take an account, which was accordingly done. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs, the sons of H, against J M and S M to set aside the deed of 23rd June 1854,—Held that, notwithstanding the renunciation of executorship by J, he stood in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiffs, and the assignment, being found to have been made for an inadequate consideration, was ordered to be set aside on the plaintiffs paying the purchaser J the amount of the purchase-money. A decree in an administration suit brought by the parties whose interest had been sold against the executor of their father's will, by whom the sale had been made, held to be no bar to the maintenance of a suit against the purchaser to have the sale set aside. of his debts, having as such executors borrowed certain moneys from a bank wherewith to discharge debts incurred by them in the administration of the estate of the testator, gave as such executors to such bank a bond for the payment of such moneys on a certain date. By his will he appointed D his executor, and named the defendant his residuary legatee. At the time of his death, H K was indebted to M in a large amount, for which M held mortgages on his property. On the 5th March 1873, M's debt amounted to R1,33,631, and it was agreed between M and D as executor that the mortgaged property (estimated at one lakh in value) should be made over to M absolutely in part payment, and that D should become personally liable to her for the balance of R33,631 with interest at 9 per cent. payable within twelve months. In consideration thereof, M was to release D as executor and the defendant from liability for the sum of R1,33,631. An indenture carrying out this agreement was executed on the same day, and D gave a bond making himself personally liable to M for R33,631. Shortly afterwards a new arrangement was made. M agreed to a bandon R10,631 of the R33,631 due under the bond and to accept R23,000 payable in yearly instalments of R3,000 in satisfaction of her whole claim. The person who preferred the charge was now tried under Penal Code, s. 211, and was found to have acted with the intent and the knowledge therein mentioned, and he was convicted and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment. Held that the prisoner had instituted criminal proceedings within the meaning of that section, and that the conviction and sentence were in accordance with law. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to inquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses, and reported the result of his inquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him. The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500, and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge. On appeal, the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteath the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under excep. 8 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. He therefore reversed the conviction under s. 211, and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code
